after a fire drill.

Introduction

And this is Northwest High School, 1980-81: a two-story building anchoring the corner of W. 34th street and Moller Road. Here 2020 students attend nine 40-minute periods 176 days a year. Here 2020 teenagers "shape their lives," laughing and struggling through four of the most difficult, rewarding, and memorable years of their lives.

What will they remember about their high school? The Little 500, prom, touchdowns, broken romances, the girl in English class with that intoxicating perfume ... moments special or everyday, that lock into the memory. This is Northwest-like you've never seen it before.

During Students Council's "Spirit Week", Oberon Brannon, Sonya Chaney, Deanna Carter, and Linda Porter, seniors, dress as hobos on "Come As You're Not Day".

What they remembered

"When I look back on my high school years the most precious memory I'll have is a relationship which taught me much more, emotionally, than I could have learned in a lifetime. This relationship taught me that the feelings one has for a person, however strong as they may be, can always change.

"For five months I was the happiest person alive, and I never thought that it would change. I thought our relationship would last forever.

"But things did change. Maybe I should say "I" changed. At first we stopped seeing each other as often but that didn't work so we quit seeing each other period.

"Now I've moved on to other things and I have another boyfriend. He has also moved on to other things and he has also another girlfriend. We aren't the greatest of friends now but I wish we were because when I look back on my high school years, he'll be the first thing I'll think of."

by Lisa Osburn, sophomore

At the beginning of my freshman year, bad things started happening to me. I wanted to belong, so I started doing things such as cutting school, drinking, and using drugs with my "so-called" friends.

"I knew I could achieve better things. Everybody was behind me trying to help, but I didn't want them exactly then.

Flying around the second turn, Karen Lasiter, sophomore, makes her bid for first place in the Little 500.

"Well, the person who helped me decide to change and who still helps me is Mr. Ritter.

"My most special moment came when I got my report card after I quit trying to be someone I never really wanted to be. I had made the honor roll. I never felt so much self-accomplishment, but I really couldn't have done it if it hadn't been for Mr. Ritter. I'll always remember him not only as a gym teacher but as someone who cared enough to help."

by Susan Steele, junior

During the spring of 1980 the Pioneer baseball team took on the Scecina Crusaders. It was a cold, windy day about 49°. When we went into the final inning, Northwest was ahead 7-6. I was pitching. The first batter walked; the second batter got a single. With two on and no outs, the next two batters struck out. Now there was only one out left. However, the next batter walked so bases were loaded. If I walked the next batter, we would have to go into extra innings.

"The batter stepped up. The first two pitches were strikes. The next three were balls. I stepped to the mound, took a deep breath and said, "Dear God, let me get this batter."

"I wound up and let it go. The ball went straight down the pike. The umpire yelled, "Strike Three!" and we won the game."

by Dennis Westrick, junior

I remember my junior year when I was working on the set for "You Can't Take It With You." I put in a lot of time building and watching the actors trying to get their "act" together. During this time my most rewarding experience was when I got to sit and watch the last act from the audience. The stage was just perfect and the audience loved it! I got to laugh and cheer with the crowd. It was great just to think I helped!"

by Missy Crumrin, senior

I remember having a crush on four guys on the football team. I stayed after school everyday just to watch them practice. They were the next best things to the one and only Michael Jackson.

"As the days went by I began to find something I didn't like about them. So, I just became the little sister of the whole lot.

"I also remember when I became a member of "Porgies' Angels." Our name was Porgies' Angels because George Summers, junior, got tired of Charlies Angels and decided to change the scenery.

"Perhaps the one thing I remember most while in high school was my grade average. Actually, I cared little about my grades when I came to Northwest until I found out what they would mean. Then, the roof came down, my father would make me feel so bad by telling me how dumb or average I was, and from there my conscience would take over. I sometimes think that if it were not for my father and my guilty conscience, I would never have done as well as I have. I also have to give my older sisters credit. I was always in competition with them and fortunately they weren't too smart, or else I think I'd have given up."

First things first

Northwest High School has changed its principals, and some of its principles too.

"School spirit is really up from last year," said Daryl Hayden, senior. "I feel this boost is due to the high enthusiasm of our new principal, Mr. King."

Don King, former vice-principal at Shortridge High School, replaced the retired George Gale, Northwest's lead man for seven years. With him King brought some new ideas and policy changes.

Male teachers donned the "not-so-formal" look as King eased some of the teacher dress codes. Robert Burns, math teacher, even wore blue jeans. Burns said, "For breaking up fights, they're better than my Johnny Carson men's wear."

In athletics, the varsity football squad played its home games in the newly-dedicated George N. Gale Stadium. The Athletic Booster Club paid for the tennis team's first uniforms, while plans were drawn up for NHS's first girls' softball team.

Biology teacher Vicky Jarrett will coach the new team.

"We're going to be cute, but we're going to be good," said Jarrett. "I'm very enthusiastic about our first year."

The Student Council, under new sponsor Ray Brown, brought floats back to the Homecoming and started "Council Corner," a column in Telstar emphasizing student feedback and spirit.

Kevin Spencer, junior, donned his silver cape and helmet to play the role of Spirit Man, super cheerleader at basketball and football pep sessions. Spencer's drama coach, art teacher James Waymire, replaced Linda Davis to direct his first high school play.

The junior-senior prom got a "shot in the arm" as it moved from the Indianapolis Athletic Club to the Indianapolis Hilton and became a semi-formal dinner-dance.

Two gates, one on each of the rear parking lot entrances, were the most notable physical change of Northwest High School in '81. According to Principal King, "The gates are for the students protection, not restriction; they allow for better monitoring of Northwest's ingoing and outgoing traffic."

And within the school, fifteen new teachers joined the Northwest staff: Kenneth George, George Gray, Barbara Haskett, and Debra Leverett, Business Education Department; Robert Meurer, English Department; Susan Selvy, Foreign Language Department; Harrison Shaffer and John Wallace, Industrial Arts Department; Mary Kelly and Carolyn Riley, Mathematics Department; Larry McCloud and Ronald Reichel, Social Studies Department; Albert Cherry and Darlene Culp, Special Education Department; and Jethro Knazze, Permanent Substitute.

The Guidance Learning Center (GLC) was replaced

Crowding into the hallway outside the cafeteria, seniors anxiously wait for their class schedules.

with the Educational Adjustment Center (EAC) because the federal government stopped giving the money needed to pay the GLC staff.

King said, "In my opinion, this is one of the many instances in which government has cancelled funding for the wrong program."

New people with new ideas; new coaches, teachers, and teams made this Northwest like you've never seen it before.

Using her lunch period to do her homework, Sheila Parrish, junior, looks up to "check out" what's happening around her.

Northwest, King had spent seven years as vice-principal at Shortridge High School. In an interview with Vanguard and the journalism class, King gives his feelings about topics of interest to the students.)

King begins reign

(Editor's note: With new ideas and fresh enthusiasm, Don King became principal in 1980. Formerly a science teacher at VANGUARD: How would you like to improve the general attitude of the Northwest students?

KING: Students should feel better about coming to school, feel like they're getting more out of it, and feel like it's a worthwhile place to be . . . that teachers care about them, and the other students feel like they care about what they learn.

VANGUARD: And what is your overall opinion of this school?

KING: You've got two things really going for you: You've got an excellent student body and you've got an excellent staff. However, the staff really doesn't feel successful and the students don't either. I don't think anybody realizes what a good thing they've got here.

VANGUARD: Okay, now for the good stuff. How about violence in the school?

KING: Not you guys too! I've been in conferences all week about this.

Okay, you really want an answer, huh? It is a problem but a problem that has been overplayed by the media. The public likes to think there's a lot of violence in the school, but Northwest doesn't have much.

I don't even understand vandalism. I think it's the act of a very juvenile mind-it has no purpose.

VANGUARD: Do you see the possibility of a police dog coming every day sniffing lockers for drugs?

KING: I would if I thought there was a need. I just don't think the drug problem here is any worse than my other school.

VANGUARD: Locker search has been a controversial issue. Is it legal to search a student's property without a warrant and does it occur at Northwest.

During halftime at the Marshall game, the Silverettes perform "Consider yourself at home, consider yourself part of the family" to welcome Don King to N.H.S.

Former Principal George N. Gale received a plaque of appreciation from Student Council for all his efforts toward Little 500.

KING: It is legal-certainly it is legal. But it is neither legal or right (morally correct) to do this for no reason.

If I just decided that one day I'll make a full-blown search of everything ... if I think, well, it's a slow Tuesday afternoon, nothing really going on, and in the 307th locker that I come to I happen to find someone is dealing out of that locker ... then I not only don't have a legal right, I don't have a moral right to do anything about it.

But, if I do have some kind of suspicion that someone on the second floor west wing is keeping some kind of forbidden materials in a locker and I have it pinpointed down to 15 or 20 lockers ... I might open all 15 or 20 lockers on the reasonable suspicion that I know there's a problem of some sort.

VANGUARD: How about the search of cars?

KING: Okay, the same thing might be true if a little white van pulls in at 2:30 everyday and several students gather around the van with money in their hot little hands, and they go in one side and out the other-it might occur to me that there is a suspicious activity going on-in fact if it doesn't occur to me I'm pretty dense, right?

VANGUARD: That's ... a distinct possibility. Okay, why aren't students allowed to come back into the building after leaving anymore-say a person gets out sixth period and has a club meeting ninth. He's not supposed to come back in.

KING: There's got to be a place for the students who get out early to wait. Have you ever heard of a non-quiet study hall? It's a place where kids can drink pop and talk to their friends while they wait for their afterschool activities. We need that here-someday.

VANGUARD: One last question: you eliminated the teacher dress code this year. Why?

KING: I don't care what they wear as long as it's appropriate and they know they are the teachers and the students are the students. I'm not "into" making everyone wear a tie.

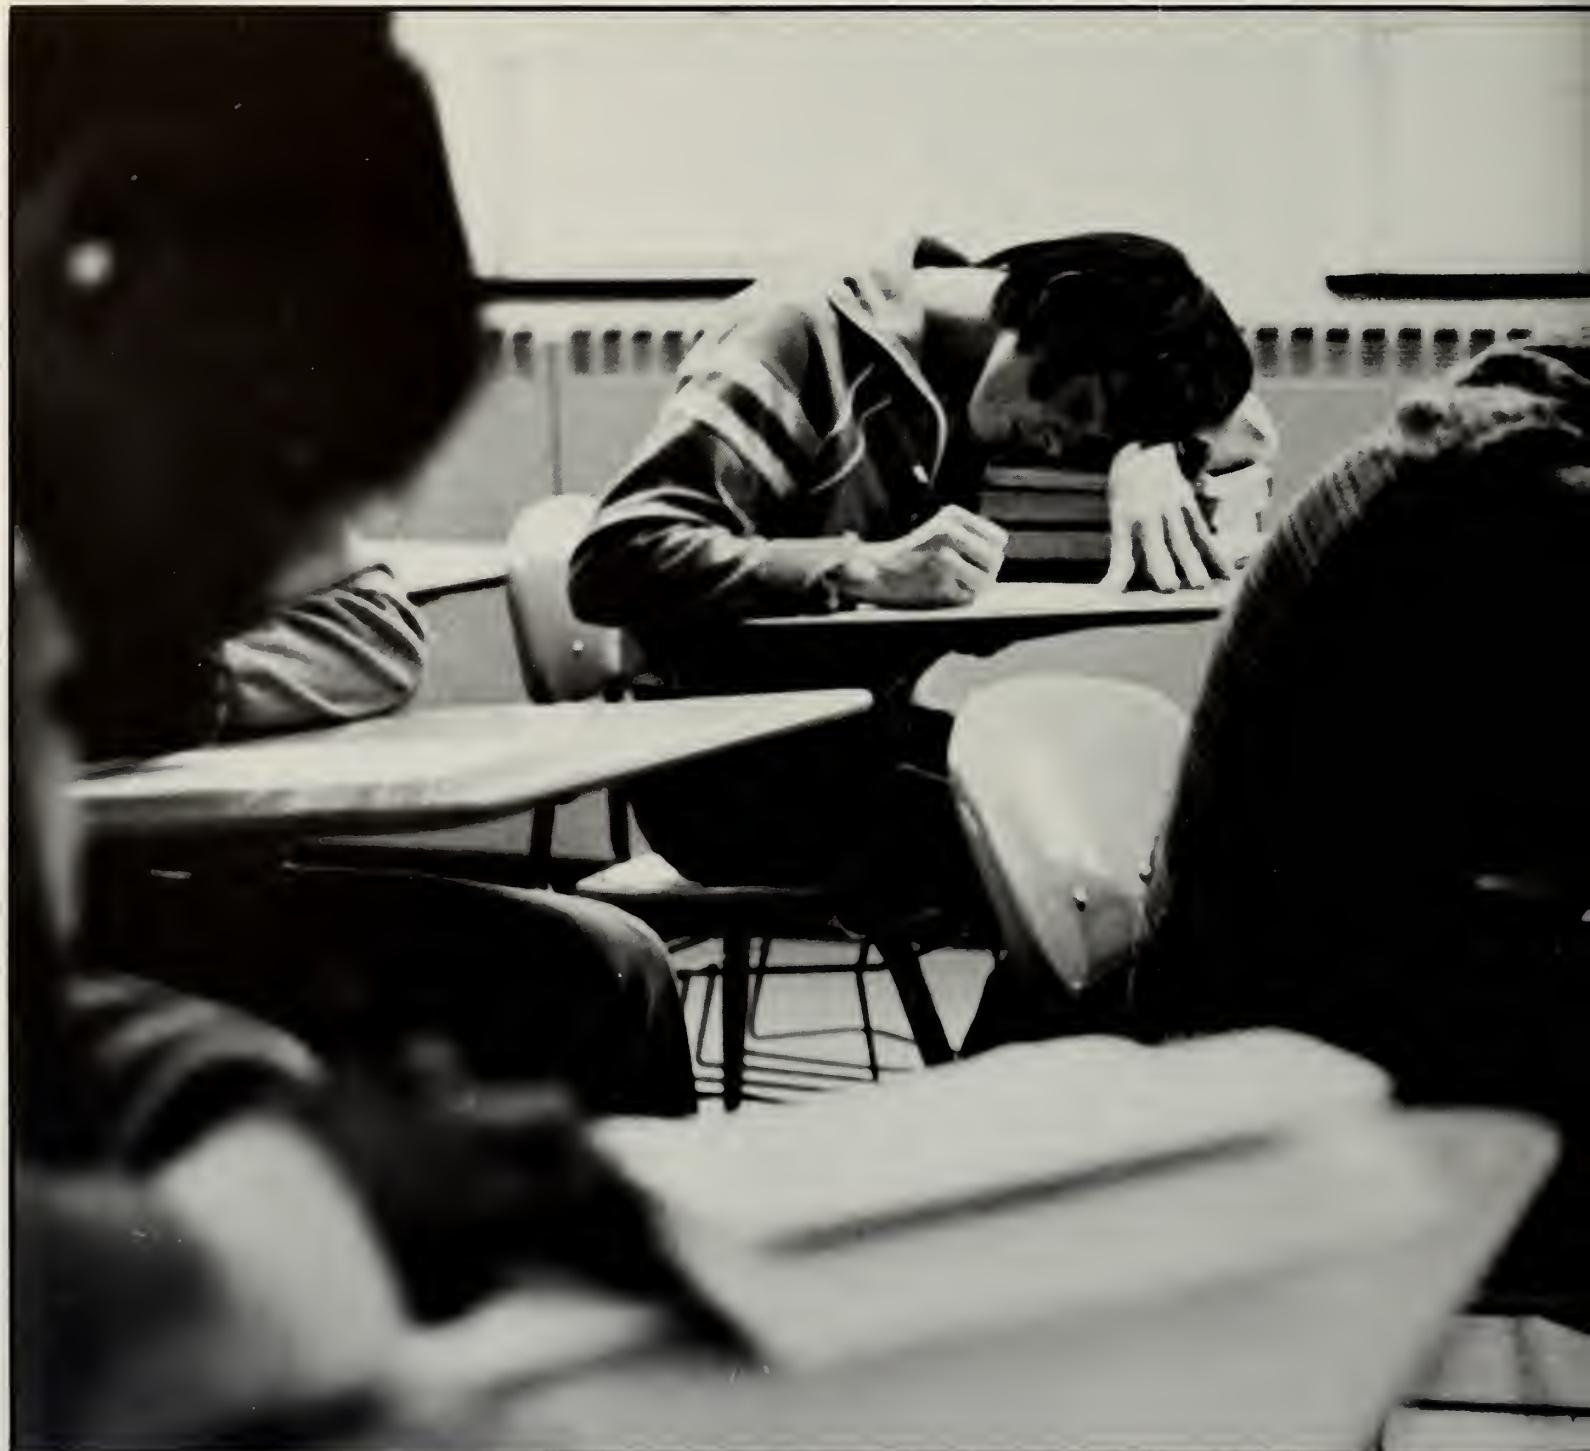

Is that it? Well, come back and see me if you need anything else.

Less $, students = cutback

The Indianapolis Public School System saw rising operating costs and falling enrollment during the '70's. In light of those facts a 37 member Indianapolis School Board task force studied the city's 10 high schools to recommend one or more be closed in the fall of 1981.

During the fall semester of 1980, total high school enrollment in IPS was down 27 percent compared to its peak year of 1971-72. IPS projected that high school enrollment would drop another 26 percent by September of 1985. By closing a high school the system hoped to save $1 million a year.

It was unlikely that Northwest would be closed. NHS had the lowest per capita educating cost of all Indianapolis city high schools in 1981, $1,805.43. In contrast, Crispus Attucks High School had a per capita educating cost of $3,264.08.

Northwest also had the lowest teacher turnover, lowest dropout rate, lowest absentee rate, and highest college enrollment of the IPS high schools in '80.

Northwest High Schools academic program was made of 13 departments in '80: art, business, English, foreign language, home economics, industrial arts, math, music, physical education, ROTC, science, social studies, and special studies.

"The art department (at NHS) is a good one because the teachers in the department have complimenting areas of interest," said Lukashik. "They're all eager and young-except for myself."

The business department was among the largest of the elective departments at Northwest, with an enrollment of 1174.

"The business department was severely hurt by teacher cutbacks," said Nancy Lott, department chairman.

"Our courses are basically geared toward students planning to immediately join the work force after graduation."

Betty Niles, English department chairman, said that although staff cutbacks due to a money shortage seriously hurt her department, Northwest's English program was the best of the city in 1980-81.

"English is becoming more important to our society everyday," said Niles. "We have the best teaching staff in the city, a superior student body, and the test scores to prove it."

"The problem with our foreign language is not a shortage of teachers but a shortage of students," said Sondra Hayes, foreign language department chairman. "However, I can be nothing but optimistic as to its future."

"Our course offerings are all related to family life," said Donna Pults, home economics department chairman. "The courses are concerned with the care and feeding of the family and the development of good relations within the family."

More than half of Northwest's 1980 grads did not enroll in a college or university in the fall of '80. A field potentially valuable to students joining the work force immediately after graduation was industrial arts.

Arthur Pannell, industrial arts department chairman, said his department had been adequately equipped with supplies but the reinstatement of higher levels of drafting, electronics, graphic arts, metals, construction industries, and power mechanics would have revived interest in industrial arts at NHS.

"An industrial arts department is as essential as the other major departments," said Pannell. "Because of the practical knowledge provided and needed in this area, a minimum of two credits should be required for graduation."

At least four credits of mathematics were required for graduation. William Saler, math department chairman said that the money crunch also hit his department in '80.

However, during the 1981 school year Saler hoped to install a computer laboratory composed of 16 microcomputers. The system could tutor students as well as serve computer math classes.

One department which was in good financial shape, according to its chairman, was the physical education department.

"Student vandalism of equipment and the theft of supplies is an ongoing concern," said James Poalston, physical education department chairman. However, Poalston said that Northwest's physical education program compared well with others in IPS.

The purpose of ROTC at the high school level was to prepare students for a military career, according to Kevin Miller, battalion commander.

"ROTC also teaches management skills, dependability, discipline, and leadership," said Miller.

"For money we parked cars on race day," Miller added. "Any equipment we needed we had to borrow from Tech."

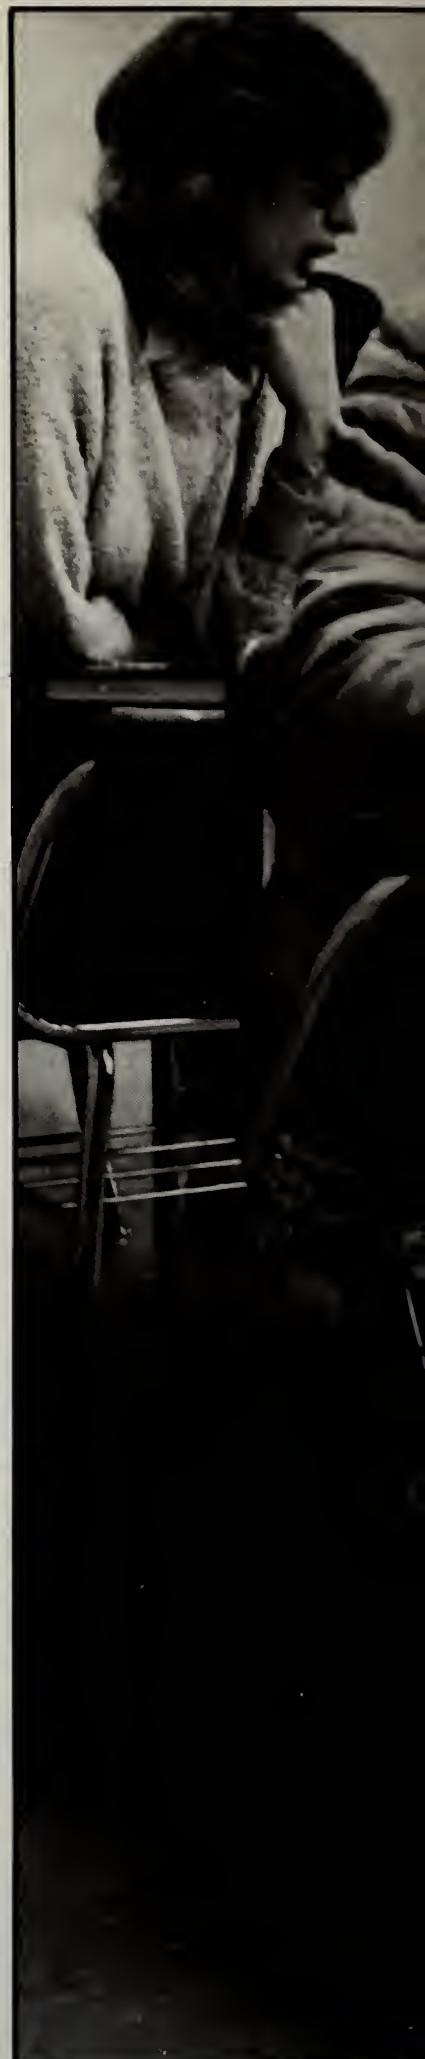

According to Robert Canner, science department chairman, the physics classes were really overloaded and there was a noticeable curtailing of supplies made available to Northwest's science department. He thought the attitudes of teachers and students in general changed for the worst in the last five years.

Blending the ingredients of a cake, Tammy Hill, junior, and Carole Brown, sophomore, prepare their home economics project.

At the Veterans' Day parade, Anthony Hunter, senior, calls orders to flag guard Bill Heck, senior.

"There is a looseness in the whole teaching system which needs to be altered," said Canner. "I think there needs to be a re-emphasis or re-orientation in this country as far as math and science are concerned."

Ralph Horn, social studies department chairman, stated, "Since the ability to destroy society has been developed social studies has been trying to prevent it (world destruction)"

According to Horn, teacher cut-backs have not yet hurt the social studies department because most of the classes offered were required for graduation.

"School closings should promote more electives because individual school enrollment would increase," Horn said.

However, as far as expanding anywhere in the near future, Horn said, "At this point in education all that anyone is trying to do is to hold the line."

Carefully completing her ceramics project, Bonita Pyles, junior, applies the finishing touches to a clay bust.

Collaborating on a lab, Ron Hicks, Daryl Hayden, and Curtis Heflin, seniors, and Tom Toney, junior, argue over a physics problem.

At the faculty Christmas tea, Tony Raguucci, music teacher, and Ken George, business teacher, mill around the punch bowl.

Allan Reed, sophomore, fires a free throw during gym class while All-Big 10 quarterback Tim Clifford prepares to rebound. Clifford and several other Indiana University education majors came to Northwest in November.

Judy Nance, junior, listens as Thomas Hopkins, math teacher, tries to simplify the problem.

R eagan, republicans win big

"It was a really weird feeling-waking up the next morning knowing we had a new president. This was the first election I'd really paid attention to"-Mike Morrison, senior.

Election day, Nov. 4, 1980, signaled a new wave of leadership for the U.S. In a major political assault the New Right movement, led by Ronald Reagan, demolished the Democrats to take control of the presidency and the Senate.

After 12 years of campaigning for the GOP nomination, Reagan, the former actor, former governor of California, won a whopping victory for the presidency over Democrat Jimmy Carter.

Reagan's victory climaxed a long, hot campaign. Carter called his opponent "war monger" while Reagan stressed the economic failures of Carter's past four years. In the end the former governor of California devastated the former governor of Georgia, winning 489 electoral votes to Carter's 49.

Riding Reagan's coattail to victory, the Republicans picked up 33 seats in the House and won control of the Senate. Their platform featured a balanced federal budget and major tax cuts.

Some of the biggest upsets came in the state of Indiana. Third district Congressman John Brademas, probably the third most powerful man in the House, lost to Republican novice John Hiler. Powerful liberal Senator Birch Bayh, bidding for his fourth term, was soundly beaten by Republican Dan Quayle.

At Northwest High School Quayle's victory caused the loss of Helen Miles, art teacher. Her husband was Quayle's campaign manager and took the job of his administrative assistant in Washington, D.C.

"Mark first was campaign manager for Mayor Hudnut's second election," said Miles. "Dan asked him to be his manager after the successful mayoral campaign."

Sixth district Republican congressional candidate David Crane came to Northwest to speak to government classes about his political ideas. In a tight race Crane lost by only 600 votes to incumbent Dave Evans, whose commercial slogan was "If you want to vote Republican and still vote for Dave Evans, just pull back (the lever), flip up, and push down."

"Voting for the first time was scary because I didn't know what I was doing," said Vince Guieb, senior. "I voted straight Republican this year."

A lot of other voters went straight GOP too. On Nov. 4, 1980, the Indiana Democrat had to hope a lot of voters "pulled down, flipped up, and pushed down." -Chris Harris

In the library during one of his study hall periods, Tyrone Hall, sophomore, selects a book about presidential elections. Sophomore English students intensely studied the 1980 general elections.

Victories scored by top talents

The "thrill of victory", usually associated with sports achievements, found its way to some Northwest students in academics.

Three NHS seniors, Sam Crider, Chris Harris, and Joy Lorenzen, were among 22 Indiana finalists in the National Council of Teachers of English writing contest. Only one other school in the United States had more finalists in the competition.

"The contest was interesting and worthwhile because I enjoy writing," said Crider. "I hope it will help me in getting accepted to colleges."

Mike Morrison, senior, won a full scholarship to Purdue University from the Evans Foundation. He qualified for the scholarship by working as a golf caddy.

"Knowing that my college education is paid for will make my summers a lot easier," said Morrison. "Now all I have to work for is beer money."

Cheryl White, senior, was a finalist in the National Negro Merit Scholarship competition, and the 1981 salutatorian.

White said, "I was disappointed in my SAT scores, but being a finalist made up for it. It proves to me that I was better than I thought I was."

Harris, the class of '81 valedictorian, also captained his Brain Game team to a semi-final match against Arlington in April.

"If we weren't smarter than the other team we tried to be faster," said Harris. "Our theme song for the year was 'Another One Bites the Buzzer.'

Michelle Ware, junior, was Northwest's winner in the Voice for Democracy speech competition. For her first place finish, Ware received $50 and the chance to win a trip to Washington, D.C. as a state finalist.

Gerald Roberts, senior class president, said, "I was happy to be elected because I ran against a lot of top-notch students.

"But we've (the class officers) been in office for a whole semester and the administration still won't let us spend our own money!"

Among the more successful departments at NHS was music.

Mike DuValle and Joscetta Caudill, seniors, received superior ratings in the Indiana State Music Association contest. Caudill also was the only Northwest student named to the All-State band.

Patty Stewart, freshman, who earned a first place in the solo and ensemble contest at Decatur Central said, "After all the hard work is over, and when you've finally won . . . well, it's, it's, I just can't explain it."

Summer 'seasons' learning

"Many people called it the "Reunion at Ball State" because many of the instrumentalists that performed at camp last year returned, like me. That's what made Mid-America Music Camp so exciting.

"The only time at camp I didn't enjoy was the first night-auditions. Ah yes, the moment where your friends became your enemies. The challenge was that I had to wait till the next morning to find out how badly I did.

"The next morning, I put on all my good luck charms and thought positive thoughts. I had to keep myself going.

"When I got to the results board, my heart nearly jumped out of my throat. I had done it! Lead alto was mine!"

At summer school I took Drivers Ed . . . I really dreaded taking the class at first, but I ended up having a lot of fun. Mr. Groomer made my classroom hours easier and Mr. Walker made my driving hours more fun. I had some pretty hard teachers, but I got a B."

Attending the National Leadership Conference at Camp Miniwanca in Michigan was probably one of the greatest things that ever happened to me in my life.

"We worked so hard! I think the only spare time I had during my entire stay was the day before we left. None of us could believe it-we had actually been given an entire afternoon to ourselves."

Almost everyone at the entire conference ended up on the beach of Lake Michigan swimming and playing in the sand. We had so much fun!

"By that time we had all shared so many different experiences together that we felt like we had always known each other. Everything about the National Leadership Conference was fun. It was more than fun; it was fantastic!"

by Jacqui Crouse, senior

When I vacationed in France last summer, it was like visiting a new world.

"I was with Mrs. Davis and Clint Goodwin. Together, we traveled through Paris, with its Eiffel Tower and Arch de Triumph, down to Chartres, where the most beautiful cathedrals stand with their stained glass windows.

"It was a hectic trip because we were always on the go. It seemed like once we arrived at one place we had to leave to go to another.

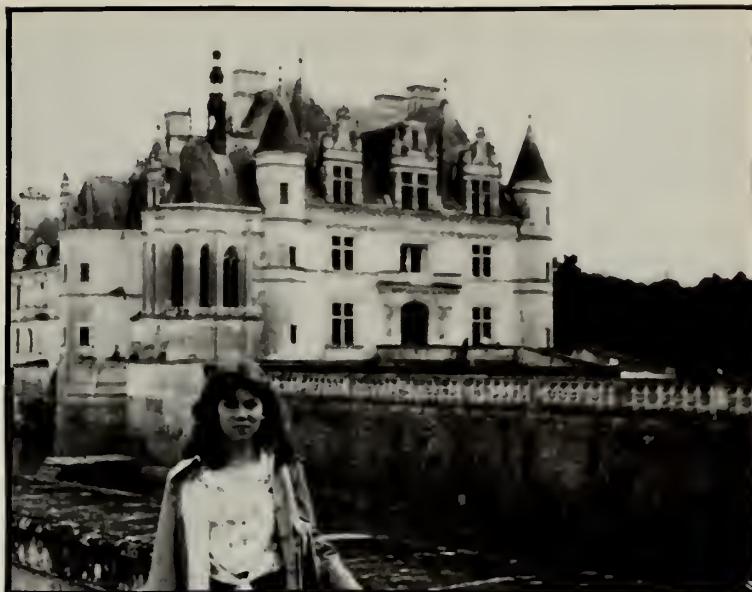

"The first hotel that we stayed at was a little rundown place. The guy down at the desk gave us a few problems. It seemed that his favorite pastime was trying to scare all the girls who were staying there by making obscene gestures to them.

"There were a few problems understanding the French people, but it was a fantastic learning experience."

The Minority Introduction to Engineering (MITE) at Purdue was an experience. I had more fun and less sleep than a security guard at a 24-hour gogo palace.

"Late one night, after about four or five cans of coke apiece, we realized that Robert Young is wrong. Caffein can do good things for you, carrying on long conversations with boring but attractive girls.

"Yes, and girls there were, from all over the country. MITE taught me that the best part of any program is the women."

by Gerald Roberts, senior

At Girls' State, we didn't have much spare time to start with. The time we did have on our own was spent mostly meeting the other girls.

"After the first couple of days, some of the girls got brave and went sunbathing.

"When we found out who was elected to the offices, defeated candidates had lots of time. We spent most of it robbing banks, getting married, murdering, getting divorced."

Academic clubs 'raise' to occasion

Raising money and raising support keynoted a busy year of activities for Northwest's academic clubs.

"Our activities mostly involved eating," said Mary Lou Steed, German Club sponsor. "Eating kuchen at the City Market and the Heidelberg Cafe sums them up."

The French Club, sponsored by Susan Selvy, French teacher, decreased in numbers but increased in activities.

"Last year all we did was eat, but this year we had different activities and we also tried to raise money to go to Canada," said Lisa Osburn, sophomore.

To help support United Cerebral Palsy of Indiana, the Spanish Club (sponsored by Sondra Hayes, foreign language department Chairman) participated in the WFBQ Pie-Mino at Castleton Square. The Pie-Mino was the domino effect illustrated by a row of people hitting each other in the face with pies. NBC's "Real People" featured the event on its Jan. 21 program.

Trying to show that Latin still lives, the Latin Club sponsored "Latin Week" at Northwest. Each day the club thought up a different activity, such as posting Roman numerals above the class rooms' numbers. According to faculty advisor James Jochum, Latin teacher, the club also tried to raise money with an auction and a White Elephant sale.

Fundraising events also dotted the calendar of DECA (Distributive Education Clubs of America).

"This year's membership, 108, was the largest it had been for a long time," said DECA sponsor Jim Sparks, business teacher.

In order to have a banquet at the end of the year, Cooperative Office Education had money-raising schemes, such as selling "Kleinheim Kits."

COE sponsor Bev Miller, business teacher, said, "We had a bowl-a-thon to raise money for Special Olympics and we went skiing in January. Most importantly we went to Grand Rapids, Michigan, to meet former President Ford and President-elect Reagan."

"The Chess Club anticipated easy competition," said Kirk Hillman, junior. Under the direction of Stephen Cassady, the team compiled a 4-1 record at mid-season with veteran players on each board.

"The first night I marched with the Northwest band, I was a freshman and very scared. We were doing the jamboree that night and at the last minute I forgot everything. We were marching toward the field to do pre-game and stopped to mark time. The person, next to me, I think she was a junior, talked to me and for a total of two minutes I was calm. Suddenly the drums started up with their cadence and the band started to move. My heart dropped like a lead weight. I felt myself become very shaky as we marched onto the field. The music started. Before I knew it the show was over."

Council undergoes overhaul

From top to bottom, Student Council underwent major changes.

"We managed to hold on to all of the traditional activities — Homecoming, Little 500, the prom," said new sponsor Ray Brown, English teacher. "For the first time in quite a while, we sponsored a dance, and we showed a movie ("Superman") in January."

Although membership hit an all-time low — 19 members — Council tried many new ways to represent the school. It started "Council Corner," a column in Telstar stating school problems and proposing solutions. SC rewrote Northwest's constitution and sponsored students for the WFBQ Pie-Mino. Floats returned to Homecoming, Turn-about returned to the winter agenda and Student Council tried to return to the position of power which it lost the past two years.

"We hoped to be a liaison with the school and I think we accomplished that," said Brown.

"I think Mr. Brown helped us out a lot," said SC president Shawnna Warner, senior. "He didn't really voice his opinion unless we asked him, but he did have good ideas."

The poor membership was Council's major problem, according to Warner. She hoped the group would double in size by the spring semester. Recruiting would be a big task.

"We had a number of hard workers but there was a lot of untapped talent (at Northwest) that wasn't in Student Council," said Brown. "It should mean more to students ... (being a member) should be more of a privilege."

Name of game is communicate

"What one says and how he says it is vital," said Mary Lewis, English teacher. "Right now, people only say enough to get by. We try to teach how to communicate."

Northwest's unofficial "communications department" gained state recognition by winning the overall award at the first Indiana Media Merit-thon in March, 1980. Six NHS students received awards in the contest.

Gwen Mannweiler, director of student publications, said, "Kids that come out of Northwest in communications and journalism have a well-rounded background-they can write, they can design, they can do almost everything."

included three student publications and various Radio and TV programs. The newspaper, Telstar, circulated biweekly, Vanguard came out in June and so did "Northwest Passages," a collection of student prose and poetry.

"Northwest has one of the best yearbooks in the state," said Vanguard editor Chris Harris, senior. "It's really neat-people from other schools have actually heard of the VanVanguard." "Some books are so predictable," said Mannweiler. "Ours changes its style from year-to-year. It reflects the work of the individual kids."

The theme for the 1981 book was "Northwest-like you've never seen it before."

Consulting the page plan, editor Kim Lanier, junior, and Martha Bohemkamp, Telstar adviser, organize an issue of the newspaper.

Communicate . . .

"We tried to show Northwest from a different view," said photographer Lori Cummings, senior. "We wanted to get underneath the outside layer."

"The yearbook kind of lacked organization," said Harris. "That was our biggest problem. Yearbook is like a machine, and we just weren't very well oiled."

The newspaper's major problem was the low number (13 members) of its staff, according to Martha Bohenkamp, Telstar adviser.

"The small size of the staff created a problem in assigning stories," said sports editor Susan Staokes, junior. "There were from two to three stories assigned to each writer, each deadline."

"Meeting deadlines became a vicious cycle," agreed Bohenkamp. "As soon as one was met, another was pending."

Other Telstar editors included Charles Ellis, senior, Kim Lanier, junior, and Derek Redelman, sophomore.

Stage manager Tim Holmes, junior, gives instructions about lighting techniques to Laura Gerking, junior, and Brenda Hepfer, freshman.

Standing in front of the class, Kelly Barker, junior, delivers an informative speech about the history of TV comedy.

Northwest Passages offered a place for creativity.

"Having one of your writings put in Northwest Passages is a real compliment," said Tammy Kyger, junior.

"There are a lot of talented people at Northwest," said Passages staff member Tejal Shah, junior. "I liked reading all of the poems and short stories."

"Speech is another side of English," said Mary Lewis, English teacher. "It gives the students a chance to combine reading with using their mouths."

Northwest revitalized its broadcasting program in 1980. NHS, already the only IPS school with facilities for a Radio-TV course, added a Debate team. Also, "WNHS" made its debut. A student radio news show, WNHS had five minutes of air time on Danville's WGRT.

Strings tune up for recognition

After staying in the shadow of other NHS music groups in past years, the Orchestra and String Ensemble decided to earn themselves greater recognition.

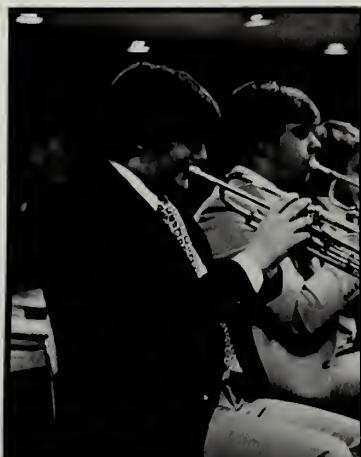

So the two groups, each directed by William Christoff, music teacher, hosted Northwest's first Ice Cream Social. Both groups performed contemporary and pop music for an audience of approximately 160.

"I felt the Ice Cream Social was successful and hopefully will become an annual event," said Christoff. "It allowed Orchestra and String Ensemble to play more contemporary music instead of the usual classical."

Northwest's String Ensemble was the only string group to perform on the Circle during the Christmas season. Also, one week the "Jim Gerard Show" featured the music groups of some local schools, and Northwest's String Ensemble was invited. It performed "Away in a Manger" and "Waysail" on the show aired Dec. 31.

Christoff said, "The Ice Cream Social allowed us to do a program on our own and gain recognition of our own. Then the Jim Gerard show topped the year."

Parade pulls band together

The 1980-81 Marching Band season provided seniors with a surprise when Northwest was invited to march in the Indianapolis 500 Festival Parade, the first time in three years. The NHS band was originally not slated to march in the festival until 1982.

"The news that we'd been asked to return to the parade a year ahead of schedule meant a lot to me," said Daryl Hayden, senior. "Memories of my freshman year and all of the fun that year ran through my mind and gave me the incentive to press on."

Trying to raise the band's spirit was the keynote for the year, according to band captain

Drum Majors Scott Brooks, senior, and Julie Crumrin, sophomore, lead the marching band onto the Tech field.

Concentrating on her next move, Sheila Parrish, junior, awaits the drum major's command.

Mike DuValle, senior.

"We tried to get the people more involved," said DuValle. "Freshmen had the wrong attitude and the spirit dropped off. So we tried to arrange parties, get-togethers, and even a touch-football game with the choir. Hopefully things will pick up next year."

Drum Majors Scott Brooks, senior, and Julie Crumrin, sophomore, led the marchers during the football season. By Homecoming their halftime show included "Veracruz," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Black Saddle/How the West Was Won," and "Somewhere."

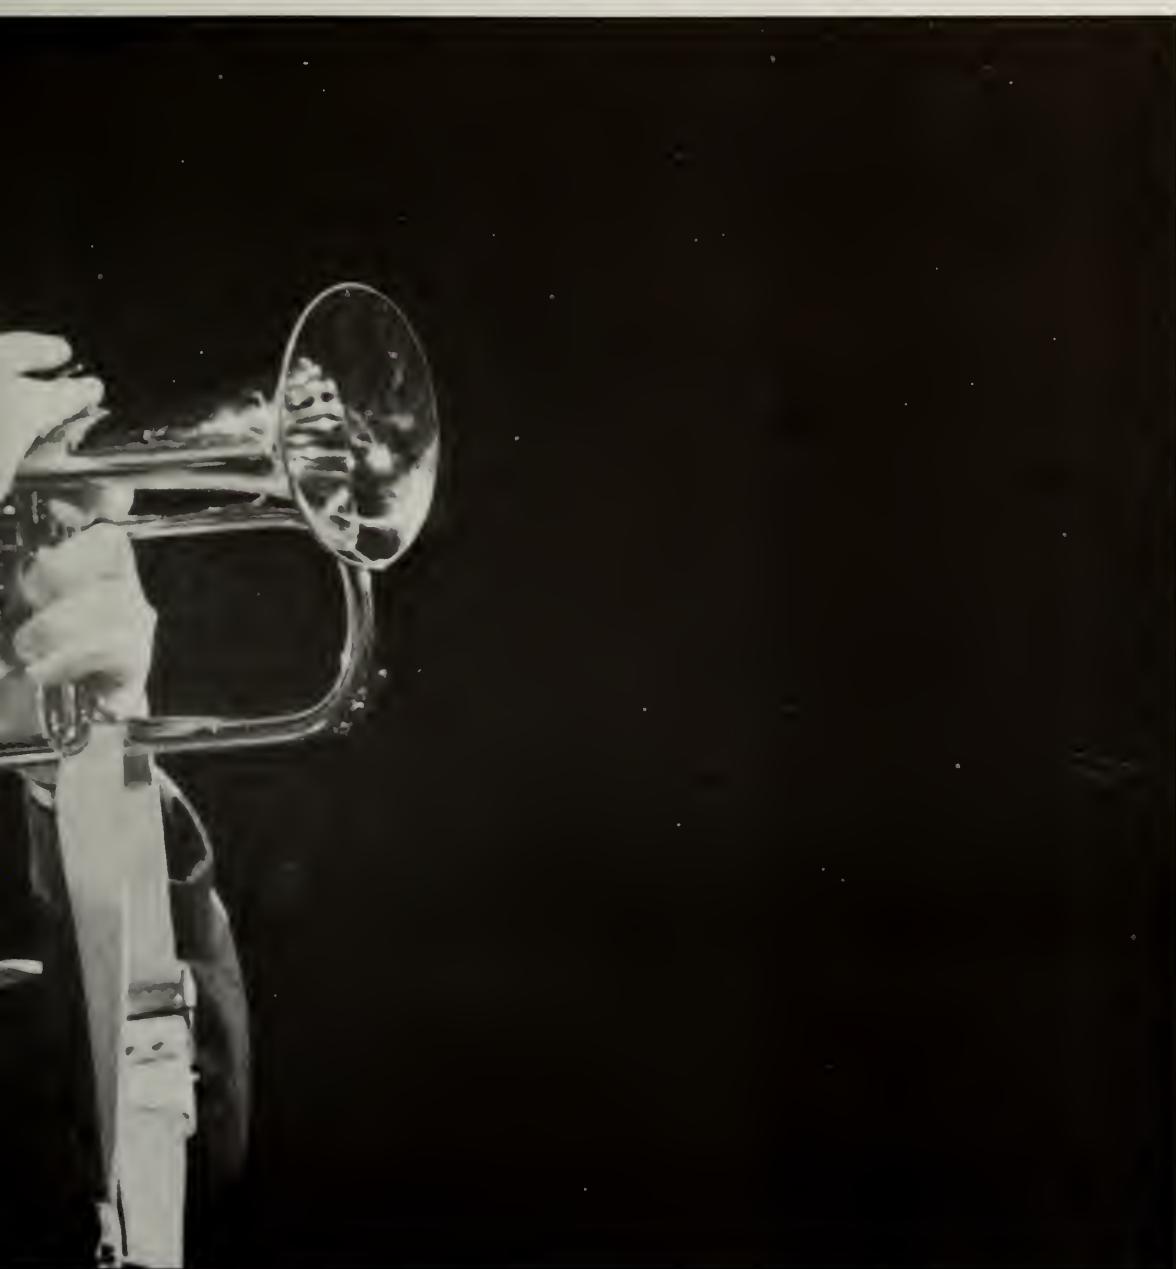

"I was very proud of this band," said Band Director Tony Raguucci. "We had a very fine marching season this year."

"I think the parade will be fun," said Julie Cummings, freshman. "It'll give us a chance to show our stuff."

Robin Gilmore, senior, plays her piccolo during "Alexander's Ragtime Band."

After a long hot practice, Robert Passarelli, freshman, anxiously waits for dismissal.

"Changing his tune," trumpeter Kevin Batman, senior, switches to a flugelhorn to perform his solo in "Morning Dance."

Spring brings big music trip

Northwest's vocal groups searched throughout the state and throughout the country for contests and competition.

Belles and Swing Choir, the music department's two elite song-and-dance groups, traveled to Orlando to participate in the Great American Music Festival. The festival featured swing groups from all over the U.S.

Lisa Pryor, junior, said, "I think the trip brought the groups closer and made it easier (for us) to work together."

The Pioneer Choir sang at the district Indiana State Music Association contest in April and at the Murat Shrine in November.

explained that the Murat Shrine contest "actually was the first contest in which the choir has competed against other schools. It was good experience for us."

The choir also performed the "Vivaldi" at Northwest, the Christmas show on the Circle, and a show in Remington, IN.

According to Oneta Coyle, junior, the performance of the Christmas programs required many rehearsals but "it was a good way to get involved in school activities and it got you into the holiday spirit."

Armed with umbrellas, Belles members Laura Gerking, sophomore, and Robin Batzlaff and Kim Dill, seniors, "sing in the rain."

Jazz: heart beat of big band

Breaking away from the marching band, two other instrumental groups performed during the winter and spring months: Jazz Band and Pep Band.

"The Jazz Band is the heart of the Northwest music department," stated Mike DuValle, senior. "We're recognized in the state. I think we have the best jazz band in central Indiana."

The spring Jazz Concert headlined the year for the Jazz Band. It also entered the Indiana State Music Association district contest in February.

"I thought we were between first, second, and third in the state this year," said Derek Clay, senior. "But definitely (the best group) in the music department."

As a member of pep band, Irene Bernheisel, freshman, performs the school song during a home basketball game.

Setting the rhythm at home basketball games were the two pep bands, the green and the silver. The two groups, formed from the marching band, rotated between games, and tried to keep enthusiasm flowing through the home crowd by being loud.

"Pep band was fun. It was our job to get the crowd fired up," said Charles Ellis, senior. "That's why the people in the band acted so crazy sometimes. The only bad part was that they wouldn't let us play very much. We were only allowed to play during time-outs and halftime."

Credit loss hurts Silverettes

When credit for the Silverettes first period class was dropped in the spring of 1980, the "class" of the Silverettes dropped also.

"There was no way to make them do any work," lamented sponsor Bev Marshall, physical education teacher.

This season began in June with eight hot weeks of summer school. Forty-two people formed the corps. However, after the football season ended all but 15 of the girls quit the squad.

Pom-pom captain Cathy Newton, junior, said, "If they brought back the credit, then if people didn't come to practice they'd get their grades lowered."

Other Silverette captains included Robin Batzlaff, senior, commander; Pam Miller, senior, rifle captain;

Seanne Fisher, junior, pompon captain; and Oneta Coyle, Pam Rogers, and Melissa Troll, juniors, flag captains. Newton said the captains had trouble keeping spirit within the corps.

"I was proud to be a Silverette my first two years," said Miller. "But not this year. It really went downhill — well, the whole band did — and I just didn't care anymore. Nobody did."

Cheers go up for winners

At the National Cheerleading Association of America camp in the summer, the Northwest yell-leaders won the Award of Excellence, the Spirit Stick, and the talent competition. But later in the year, they lost their sponsor, Helen Miles, art teacher.

Miles exited Northwest after her husband became Senator Dan Quayle's administrative assistant in Washington, D.C. Barbara Haskett, and Bev Miller, business teachers, replaced her as sponsor in November.

"I didn't make any changes because it was hard to step in in the middle of the year, especially after someone like Mrs. Miles," Haskett said.

Shereida Brown, junior, said, "We really cleaned up at camp but we didn't do very well, really, in the State Fair."

Joining the varsity and reserve during the school year was the frosh squad. The freshman cheerleaders practiced twice a week, and daily when a competition neared.

"It gives you a feeling of accomplishment to be a cheerleader," said Julie Humphreys, freshman.

The frosh squad also did well in competition. It placed first in the Smith-Walbridge cheerleading contest at Butler University and second in a contest at Lawrence North High School.

"I was in gymnastics and trying my best was my greatest concern. There were many people a lot better than me, but I tried to push myself as far as I could go. Ms. Marshall was spotting me on a glide kip and finally she told me to work on it by myself and concentrate on getting up. Two minutes later I screamed with sheer happiness because I finally learned the trick I had worked on for a very long time. Great team one away from tops

With less than two minutes remaining in the game, Northwest took the ball on its own 35-yard line. Manual had just scored; the Pioneers, ahead most of the game, now trailed, 21-20.

A small drive stalled on the 40-yard line. Two penalties forced NHS into a fourth-and-forty situation. Heaving a desperation pass, quarterback Mike Cain, senior, was intercepted.

But the Manual linebacker fumbled when he returned the interception, and the Pioneers had new life. With five seconds left, kicker David Robinson, senior, attempted a 47-yard field goal-off to the right.

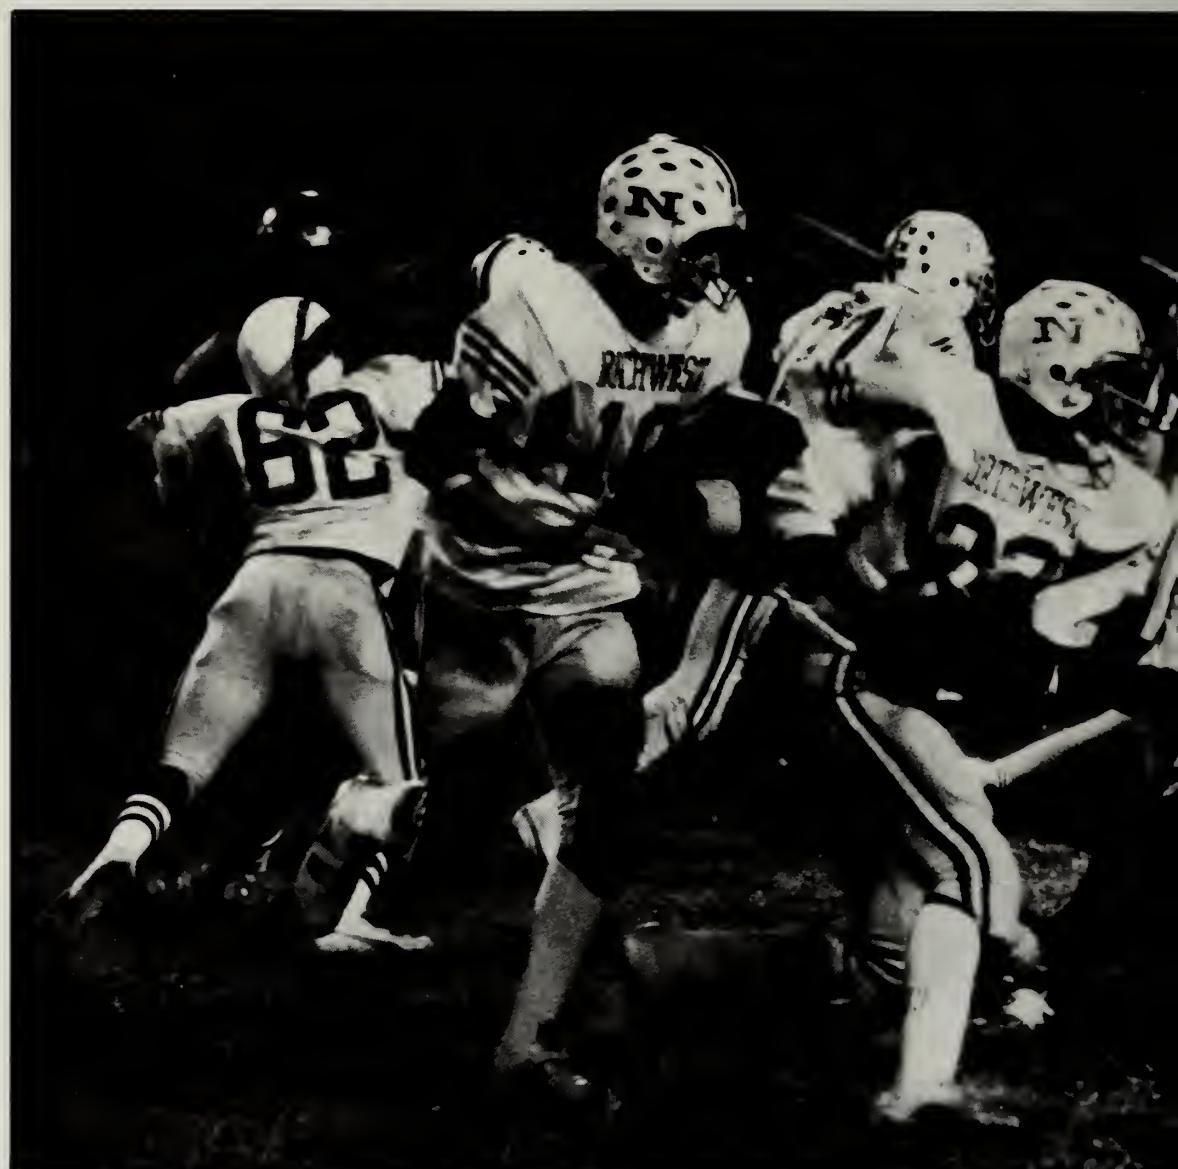

But Manual was called for roughing. Then they jumped offside. Robinson, now with a 27-yard try, drilled the three-pointer with no time on the clock. Northwest won, 23-21. The victory kept alive the gridiron team's hopes for a city championship.

"At the start of the season we were apprehensive about how well we could move the football," said Compton. "But we looked forward to the season with optimism."

Finishing 9-1, the Pioneers wound up as city runners-up; their only defeat coming from city champion Marshall.

"Our defense really helped our offense by causing turnovers," said Compton.

Nicknamed the "Unknown Convincers," the Northwest defense gave up a stingy 6.5 points per contest, led by two-way all-state linemen Tom "Bubba" Edwards and Keith Price, seniors. Aaron Richardson and all-city linebacker Don Gandy, seniors, led the team in tackles. Randy Hobbs, senior (856 yards), Mark Dupree, junior (555 yards), and Jay O'Riley, senior (498 yards), led the Northwest ground attack. Cain connected on 44 percent of his passes and five touchdowns. Overall, the offense average 18 points a contest.

The Manual victory

highlighted a seven-game winning streak after the 7-3 defeat by Marshall, a game in which Northwest held the powerful Patriot offense at bay. Marshall's only touchdown came on a 30-yard fumble recovery.

JV's 9-1 means city champion

The varsity wasn't the only NHS football team with a successful year. Altogether, the Northwest program finished 25-4 for 1980.

"I think our football program here is so good because of our coaches, summer conditioning, tradition, and the way we keep people together," said varsity football coach Larry Compton. "The same people play together freshman through their senior year."

The junior varsity team, like the varsity, finished 9-1; but, unlike the varsity, won the city championship.

"We played hurt all season and the kids didn't give up," said JV coach John Mitny. "Their goal was the same as mine and that was to be city champs."

A steamroller offense averaged 24 points per game, led by the running of halfback Keith Washum, sophomore. Washum gained 1073 yards in 10 games, averaging 11.3 yards a carry and scoring 15 touchdowns.

Quarterback Ted Talley, sophomore, completed 65 percent of his passes and tossed three touchdowns.

A tough defense held opponents to seven points a game. Allan Lloyd, sophomore, led the team in tackles with 23 solos and 70 assists.

seven of its last eight games and five in a row.

Frosh Coach John Wallace said, "I think they did a great job. They had plenty of teamwork and a desire to win."

Overall, according to Wallace, Northwest's football future looked bright for the next three years.

"Communication between the coaches was one reason the football program did so well this year," said Wallace. "Coach Compton has an excellent program, and Mr. Leamon (athletic director) contributes quite a bit."

Harriers take fourth; top frosh, Norris

Dominated by underclassmen, the 1980 Northwest Cross-Country team atoned for a struggling 2-4 season by placing fourth in the city and sixth in the sectionals.

Rookie coach Bill Ritter said, "It was a lot of fun. They were great kids and tried their best."

The top five varsity Harriers included Rob Glass and Marty Vlahos, juniors; Jim Goins and Kurt Kelso, sophomores; and Steve Norris, freshman.

"We started out not too good but we got better later in the season," said Joe Berger, sophomore.

The team also included Jon Cardwell and David Frye, seniors; Joe Berger and Don Sowers, sophomores; and Tim Bryant, freshman.

With a 17:09 clocking, Kelso placed ninth in the city, followed by Vlahos and Glass, who placed 21st and 30th, respectively. In the freshman race, Norris won with a time of 10:08.

"The city meet was our best varsity performance," said Ritter. "And Steve Norris did a nice job, too."

Glass said, "If we would have started running earlier, we would have been tough. Next year we're starting in June!"

Record year nets varsity tennis team respect

The varsity tennis team, with a 10-10 record in 1980, lost all parallelism with Rodney Dangerfield.

"We finally got some respect," said Billy Hartford, junior. "And we earned it."

With a fifth place showing in the city tournament, the netters capped their second consecutive record-cracking season. The ten victories broke a school record and the placing in the city tied one.

Individually, Gerald Roberts, senior, placed second among number one singles players in Indianapolis, the highest finish in the school's history.

"Gerald had a winning season, and through an act of God he upset the number two and number four seeds in the city tournament," said Coach Allan Sheets.

"When the fourth seed had me down 5-0 in the third set of the semis, I thought I was going to have a heart attack," said Roberts. "But all of the pressure was off when I beat him because I was a 10-to-1 shot to win the finals."

Behind Roberts, Chris Gonzales, junior, played number two singles; Claudio Passarelli, senior, was number three; Scott Brooks and Daryl Hayden, seniors formed the number one doubles team; and two teams played number two doubles, Hartford and Ken Scurlock, senior, and Lance Patterson and Dennis Westrick, juniors.

According to Sheets, home matches were moved to Tarkington Park (seven miles away) because of construction work at Riverside and the poor condition of Gustafson.

"The courts at Gustafson are worse than the surface of the moon," said Sheets. "Next year we'll play at Ben Davis."

Volleyball team falls short; 6-9

Injuries, illness, and inexperience plagued the Varsity Volleyball team during its 1980 season, according to Coach Vernon McCarty. "The team could have played better," said McCarty. "The girls played well sometimes but never reached their full potential."

Finishing with a 6-9 regular-season record, the varsity never won more than two matches in a row. Heidi Gruber and Veronica Johnson, seniors, and Twila Snyder, junior, each missed a major portion of the season. Four sophomores, Rosemary Brown, Michelle Cain, Cheryl Jackson, and Teresa Miles, moved up to the varsity. "At first, everyone played for themselves instead of working together as a team," said Miles. Cain said that the high point of the season was going to the sectionals.

"We won the first set against Ben Davis. It was so exciting! We lost the next two, but just winning one against the defending state champs was great." The junior varsity team had a "disappointing" 2-12 season, according to McCarty. He said, "The JV team consisted mainly of freshmen who played against sophomores and juniors from other schools."

Win streaks highlight year; Attucks a spoiler twice

With a late season six-game winning streak, the girls' basketball team retired 11-6 in '81.

Coach Jim Albright commented, "We had a good team, although our record didn't show it."

The season's highlight was the team's victory over Brebeuf, the 19th ranked team in the state. All-purpose forward Cheryl Jackson, sophomore, topped the team at 13.8 points a game, and also led in steals, rebounds and assists.

"The biggest disappointment of the season was losing in the second game of the sectionals by one point," said Albright.

Liz Gilmore, senior, added, "I wanted to win, because this was our last year to play together and I wanted to make Mr. Albright happy."

"This year's junior varsity team did a fine job," said Coach Vicki Jarrett. Although the team was young, they managed to record the best girls' season at Northwest. The squad finished 14-1, the one loss to Attucks, 38-36.

"The loss (which came in the first game of the city tourney) was due to Attucks' better rebounding," said Julie Cummings, freshman.

Shea Phinisee, sophomore, scored 11.8 points a game, to lead the JV. Phinisee also led the team in assists, while Shelly Cain and Robin Miller, sophomores, led the team in rebounding and steals, respectively.

Inexperience hurts young gym team

Suffering through another winless season, the gymnastics team finished with an 0-9 record.

"Despite their inexperience, the girls were dedicated and worked very hard," said Coach Beverly Marshall.

The team added six freshmen to a squad already dominated by sophomores. This inexperience, coupled with a lack of practice time, led to the disappointing year, said Marshall.

Marshall said, "The girls on the team were good at many different events. Vonda Parish and Cheryl Cooper (sophomores) and Brenda Hepfer (freshman) were competing in all four events by the end of the season."

"Our attitudes toward each other were very supportive," said Vicki Dunham, sophomore.

Price leads wrestlers to best season since '76

Led by the exploits of semi-state heavyweight champion Keith Price, senior, the varsity wrestling team recorded its first winning season since 1976.

Coach Ron Reichel said the wrestlers "showed class and poise in the way they could bounce back after their losses." The squad finished the season 8-7, and captured its second consecutive sectional title.

Individually, Price was named the outstanding wrestler in the city after winning the heavyweight championship. He also was sectional, regional, and semi-state champ, before losing his first match of the year in the state finals. Price ended the year 22-1.

Don Gandy, senior, and Tim Alexander and Tom Toney, juniors, also posted firsts in the sectionals.

"Wrestling is the only real individual sport offered at NHS," said JV coach John Mitney. "It's a valuable sport because it allows the guys to gain a lot of pride in themselves."

With the arrival of two new coaches, the wrestling program at Northwest underwent some revitalization. Reichel took over the varsity after formerly holding that position at Attucks High School, and John Wallace, industrial arts teacher, became the new frosh coach.

"Wrestling is a sport Coach Reichel loves," said Price. "He came very close to getting every wrestler's potential out of him. He knows what it takes to be a winner."

Gandy added, "He's one excellent coach. I wish I could have him for a couple more years."

Among Reichel's new policies included 7 a.m. practices and a game affectionately called "Rabbit."

"Every morning I had to catch a guy jogging halfway down the basketball court before he reached the far goal," said Price. "What a way to wake up in the morning."

At the state finals in Market Square Arena, semi-state champ Keith Price, senior, eyes his opponent between rounds.

Price leads . . .

"Conditioning is a lot of hard work every day — wind sprints, live wrestling, and watching what you eat," said Joey Osburn, freshman. "You can't do it just now and then."

The 1980-81 JV team wound up the season with an 7-3 slate. Jay English, junior, posted a 9-1 record and Dennis Moore, sophomore, finished 8-1.

"The team was very loyal and dedicated because these young men had the fortitude to stay with a program that is very demanding physically," said Coach Mitney.

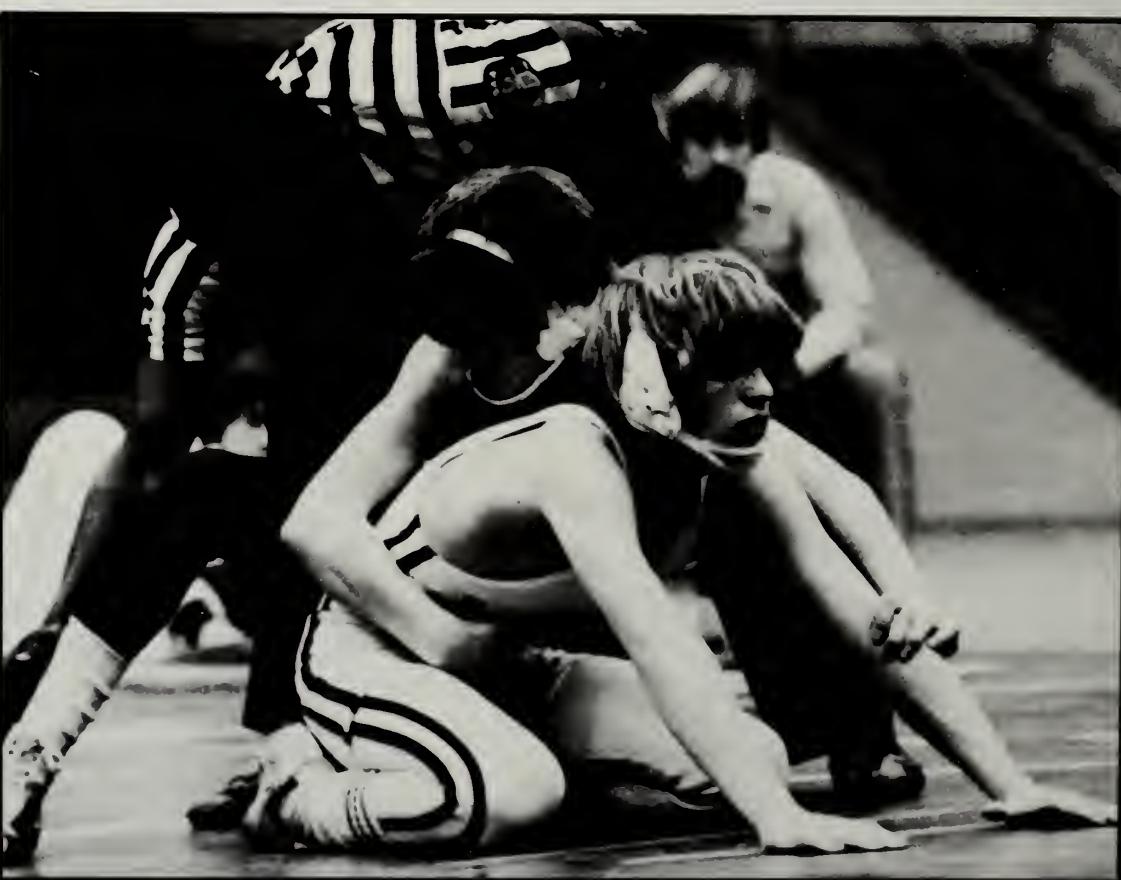

English placed second in the city tournament, and Dexter O'Bryant and Ed Culp, sophomores, recorded fourths.

At the frosh level, Osburn led a 3-3 squad by winning the city title at 98 lbs. Don Hicks, freshman, was second in his weight class, and Kyle English and Joe Starnes, freshmen, each finished fourth.

"They showed steady improvement all year," said Reichel about his younger wrestlers. "We have several good underclassmen, some talented reserves, and some strong freshmen."

Attempting to maintain control of the match, Darrin Shivers, sophomore, strives to keep his Washington opponent from twisting loose.

Varsity cagers fall short of expectations; 7-14

"We had a lot of silly problems and some untimely illnesses," said Ritter. "But everybody's got those and you have to be a survivor and go with what you've got."

Pat O'Bryant, junior, said, "It (the season) was a big disappointment. It could have been a lot better if we'd had more dedication."

Marvin Woods, senior, who led the team in scoring, hit 13.9 points per game. Following Woods, Tony Boyd, senior, averaged 12.6 points and O'Bryant also led the team in rebounding with 8.7 and 8.3 averages respectively.

Directing the offense from the point guard position, John Kissick, senior, averaged 8.6 assists per game.

Finishing with a losing record for the second year in a row, the boys' varsity basketball team fell short of coach Bill Ritter's expectations.

"My expectations were to be better than 50 percent," said Ritter. "We had four games I think we should have won."

The squad finished the season 7-14, outscored by an average of seven points per game.

Beating Shorridge in the city tourney put the Pioneers into the quarterfinals and added some brightness to their otherwise disappointing season. In the next tournament game, however, city champion-to-be Howe was victorious.

Firing over a Marshall defender, Patrick O'Bryant, junior, scores in the Pioneers' biggest win, over the state-ranked Patriots.

Battling for a rebound, Mike Cain, senior, snatches the ball away from a Ritter rival.

Penetrating Marshall's zone defense, Tony Boyd, senior, beats his man to the bucket.

John Kissick, senior, rises slowly after a foul.

Applying pressure on the man with the ball, Joe Berger, sophomore, and teammates Eric Whitfield, Gilbert Patterson, and Melvin Smallwood, sophomores, form a tough defense.

Sophomores, frosh lead basketball teams to wins

Unlike the varsity squad, the JV and frosh basketball teams played the season to a winning beat.

JV coach Robert Groomer said, "The squad was an excellent group of sophomores to work with. If all the JV teams had been composed of sophomores, this would have been the best team in the city."

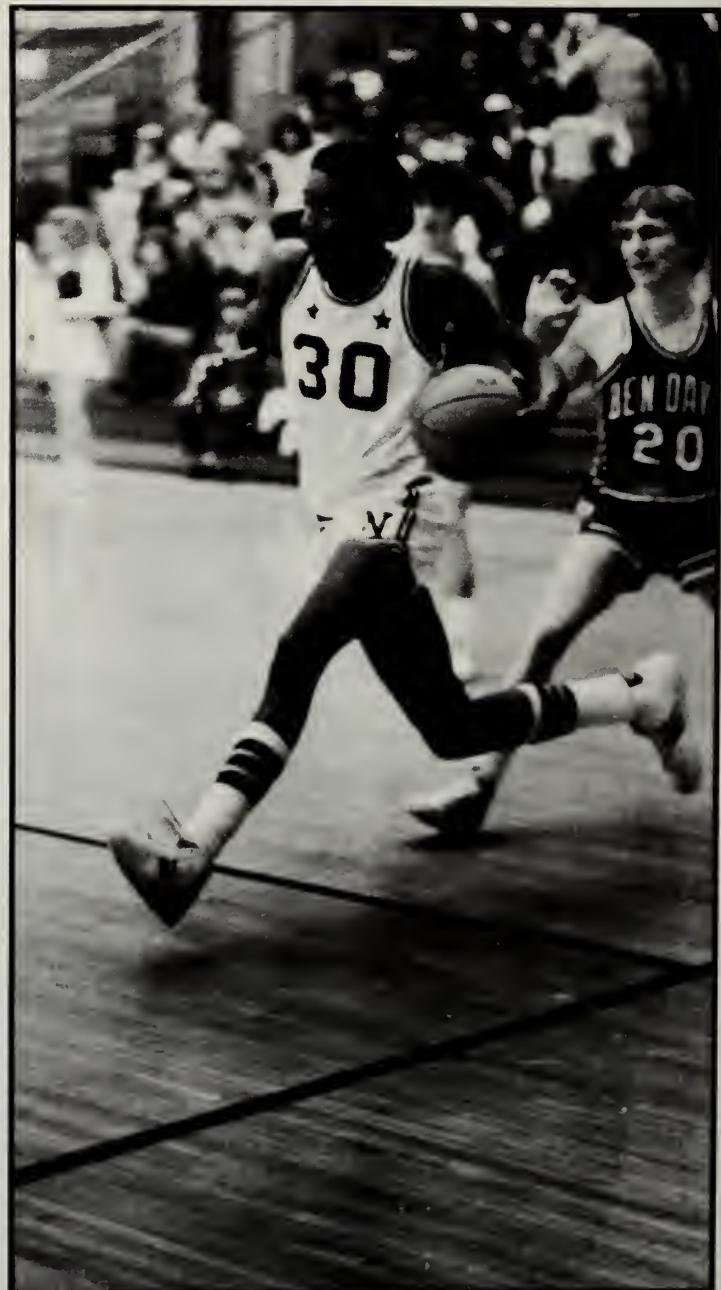

Frank Woods, sophomore, scored at an 11.3 clip to lead the 13-6 JV. Gilbert Patterson and Melvin Smallwood, sophomores, backed him up with 9.8 and 7.9 averages, respectively. Patterson and Woods also topped the team in rebounding.

"For a freshman squad," said Coach Jim Berger, "we shot remarkably well (40 percent), but only 58 percent from the free throw line."

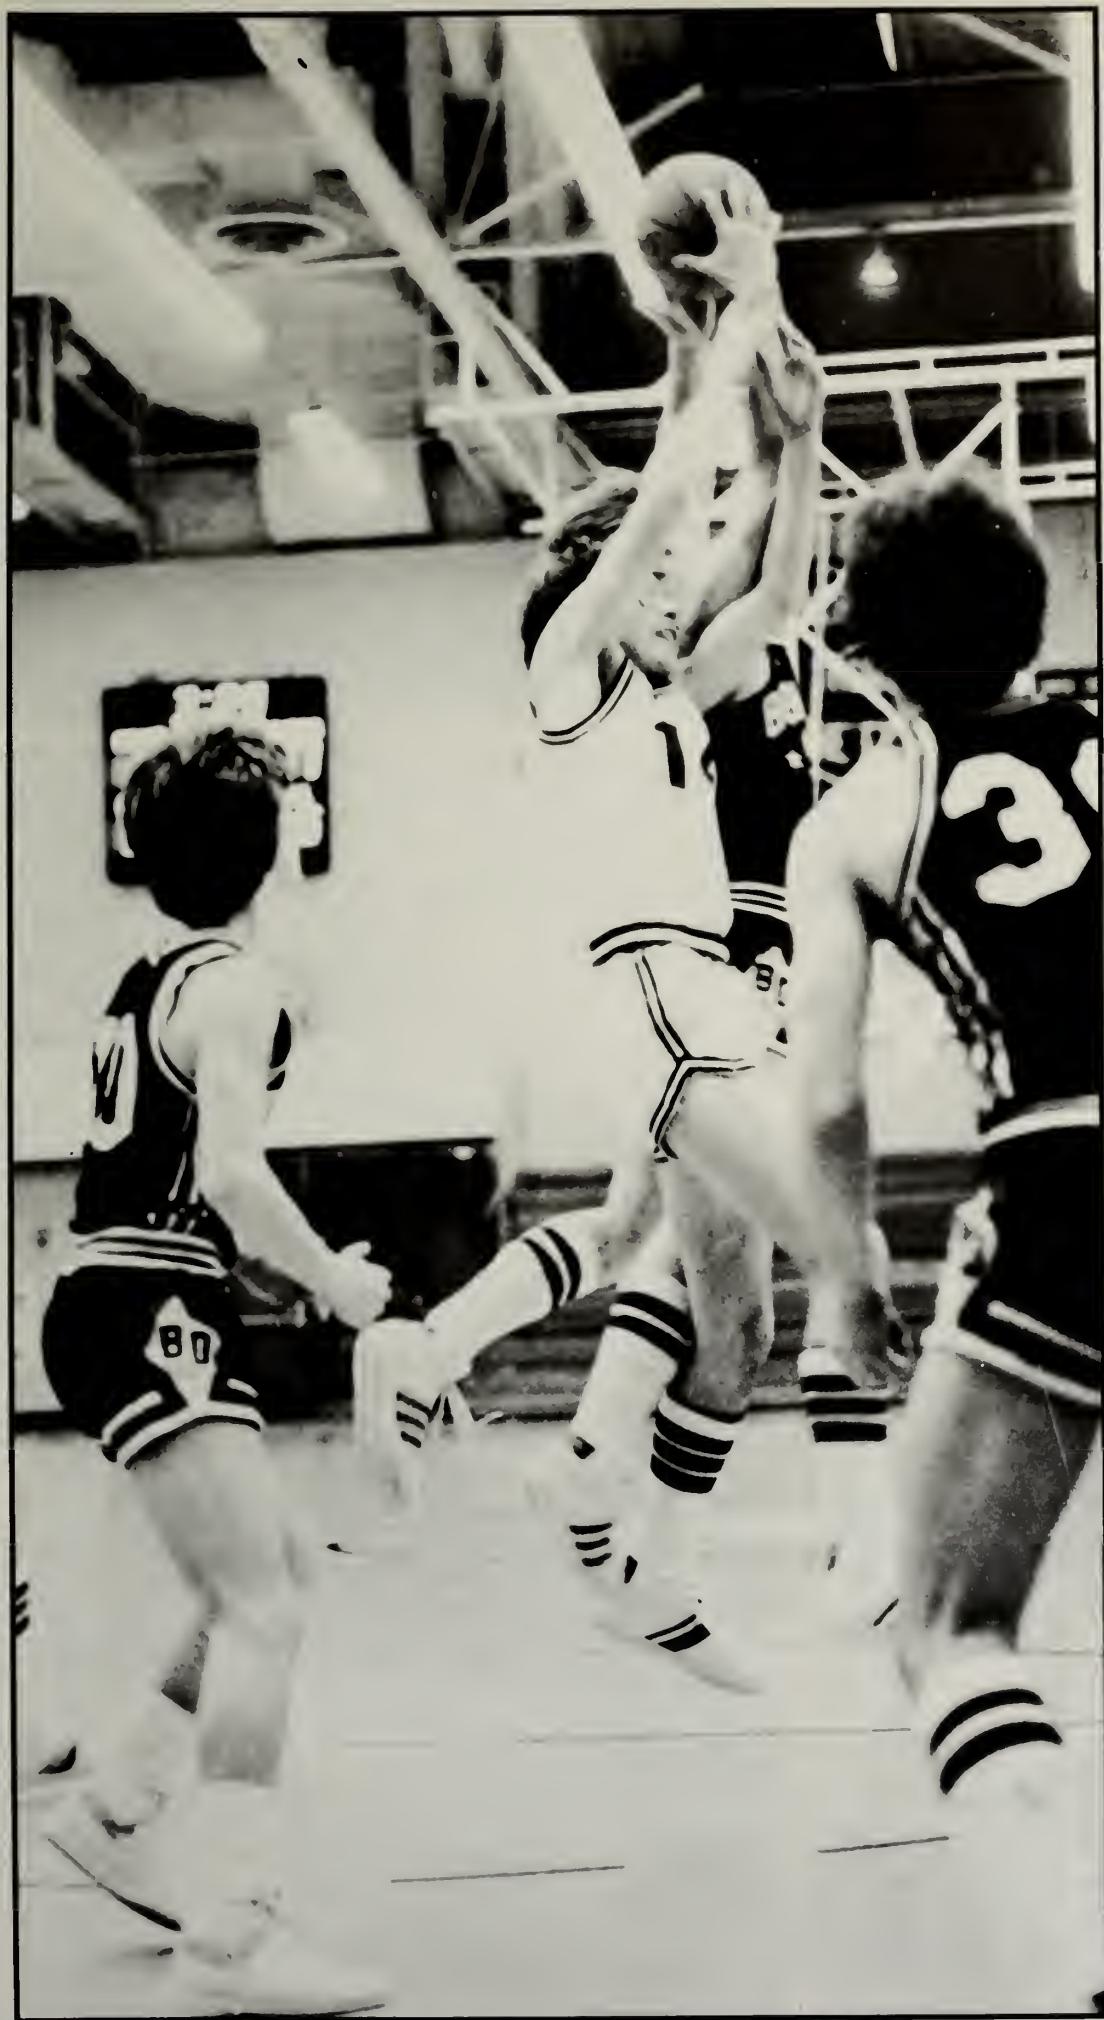

Kyle Wooden, freshman, led the 11-7 frosh team with 8.8 markers a game. Scott Miller, freshman, headed the team off the boards with six rebounds per contest, and Wooden pulled down an average of 4.8 caroms.

The team hit the books as well as the boards. According to Berger, over half the team made the honor roll and two players earned straight A's for the semester.

Intramurals have support, need space

Bowling, the only intramural sports program remaining at Northwest, showed such strong support that it raised questions concerning other such programs.

"We had a large turnout ... a very successful season," said bowling sponsor Sue Green, business teacher.

In the past NHS carried other intramurals, but lack of interest and limited facilities caused the leagues to dwindle. Bowling remained a stronghold, however.

Two leagues of ten teams comprised the 1980-81 winter season. At mid-year, team six led League 1, featuring Jody Comer, Ricky Eastridge, and Brenda Short, seniors, and Shelly Eastridge, sophomore. Heading League 2 was team 25, composed of Pam Devan, junior, Robin Roberts, sophomore, and James Higgins and Jay Young, freshmen.

Individually, Comer topped League 1 with a 168 average, and Annette Dunham, junior, shot 143 per game. Young carried the high average in League 2 at 153, and Shawnna Warner, senior, and Nita Gregory, sophomore, tied for the girls' high at 123.

"I would like to see the other intramurals back because they're good for the school," Green said.

In other sports, NHS students who either couldn't make or didn't want to make the school teams looked to community leagues. While the crowds weren't as large or the gyms as noisy, the competition was there. Northwest students made up an estimated 75 percent of Northwest Youth Athletic Association's basketball programs.

Chris Burns, senior, said, "If I'd made Northwest's basketball team, I wouldn't have played much. At NYAA I played more and had more fun."

Athletic director Charles Leamon, science teacher, said that the already-crowded gymnasium couldn't hold an intramural program.

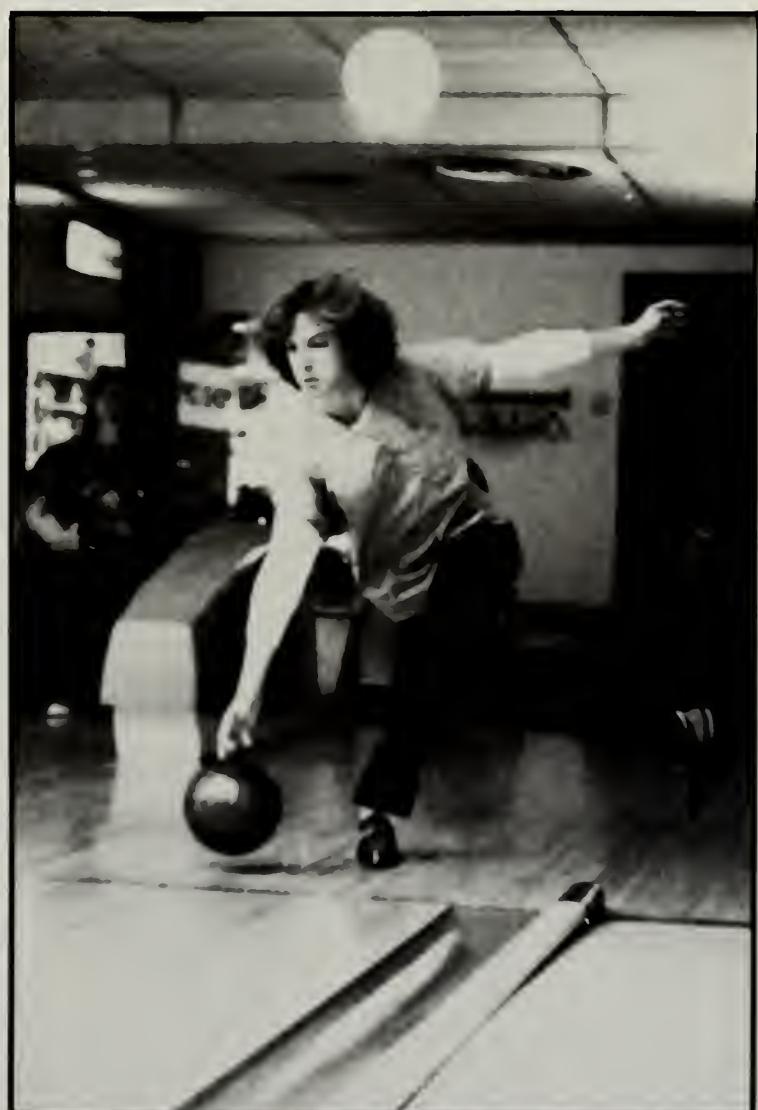

"Those who don't make teams at school should have a chance to participate in sports," said Burns. "Not everyone is good enough to play at Northwest."

Spring sports

"Poor weather really hurts the spring sports, especially baseball. Track can practice inside but baseballers are really put to a lot of trouble." — Vernon McCarty, track coach

Striving for an extra inch, Wayne Eryin, sophomore, flies through the air at the city meet.

Straining to hold the lead, James McMichel, '80, heads toward the finish line in the 100-meter dash. McMichel finished ninth in the state meet.

Flopping over the high bar, Willie Jones, senior, clears 6'3" in the sectionals at North Central.

Track team strength in sprints and distance

The Northwest boys' varsity track team recorded a solid 6-2 record behind James McMichel and LaMont Scott, '80.

"The team met my expectations and fulfilled its potential excellently. They did very well for the competition," said Coach Vernon McCarty.

McMichel, in the 100 meter dash, and Scott, in the low hurdles, led the squad to a sixth place finish in the sectionals, and seventh place scores in the regionals and semi-state. Individually, both placed ninth in the state.

McCarty said, "Solid sprinters and strong freshmen were the two major assets. Field events were our weak points."

Setting the pace, Rob Glass, junior, and Kurt Kelso, sophomore, head for the back stretch in the half-mile run.

Behind the combined scoring of McMichel, Scott, Willie Jones, senior, and Rob Glass, junior, NHS finished ninth in the city meet. McMichel placed second in the long jump and fourth in the 100-meter dash, while Scott was third in the low hurdles. Jones and Glass placed sixth in the high jump and seventh in the 800-meter run, respectively.

"Not having a couple of the freshmen running varsity in the city really hurt us," McCarty said.

Kurt Kelso and Keith Washum, sophomores, led the frosh team to a third place showing in the city. Kelso won the freshman mile and placed third in the 800-meter run, while Washum placed first in the 100-meter and 200-meter dashes and second in the long jump.

Pitching, fielding aid final play

Strong pitching and fielding overcame the poor hitting of the varsity baseball team, according to Coach Don Stone. The squad finished 12-10 in the regular season and second in the sectionals.

Four-time letterman Doug Westrick, '80, headed the pitching staff with a 6-1 record and a stingy 0.89 earned run average. Don Gandy, senior, finished 2-0 on the mound and George Holt, junior, was 2-1.

DeWayne Harris, '80, led the team in hitting with a .367 average, followed by Keith Kincaid, '80, at .353 and Greg Norris, junior, who hit .314. To illustrate the squad's lack of power, Kincaid led the team in homers with one.

"We just didn't hit well enough to win the close games," said Stone. "We lost six games by two runs or less."

Northwest lost in the sectional game to state-ranked Ben Davis, 3-2. Ben Davis went on to finish third in the state.

"We knew we were weak hitters but got what we wanted from the season," Stone added. Pat Ehret, '80, Kincaid, and Westrick were named to the city all-star team from Northwest's senior-dominated squad. Returning lettermen included Gandy, Holt, Norris, and catcher Brad Pate, senior.

Breaking away Keith Washum, sophomore, zips toward the finish line. Washum was the freshman city 100 and 200-meter dash champ.

Winding up for the pitch, Pat Ehret, '80, attempts to strike out a Ben Davis batter. Ehret was one of three Pioneer baseball players named to the city all-star game.

First baseman for the varsity squad, Greg Norris, junior, positions himself for the next play at the Pike Tourney.

During the city track and field meet at Tech, Joe Collins, junior, spins for strength in the discus.

Golf team season has two endings

Against other public high schools the 1980 Northwest golf team ended with a 6-4 record; however, parochial and county schools beat them seven times out of nine to drop their record to 8-11.

"The parochial schools are the real powers in city golf and Northwest can't really compete with them in the big invitationals," said Jim Albright, golf coach.

Like many public high schools, NHS has lost interest in golf while linksmen at parochial and county schools begin competing at young ages, according to Albright.

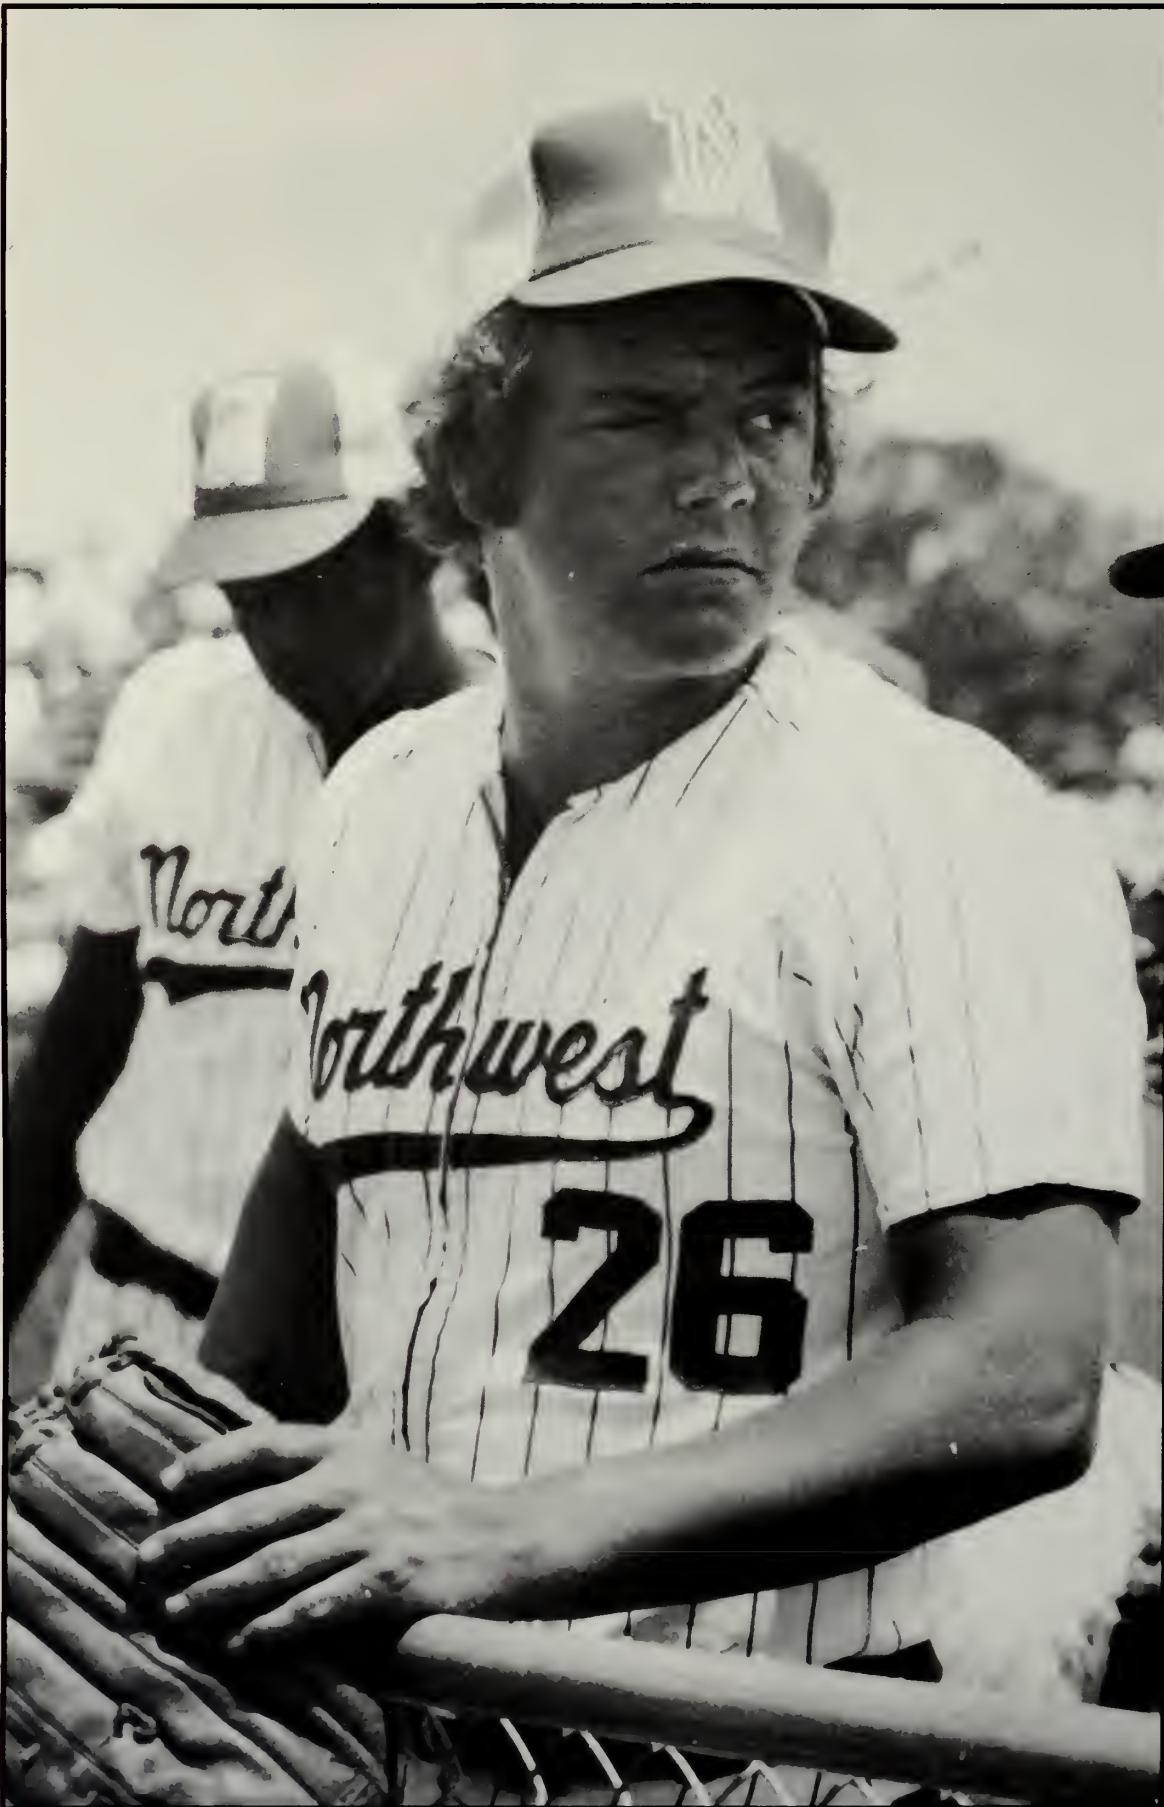

The coach said, "We only got blown out twice, though. Almost every match was decided by one or two strokes."

Mike Cain, senior, led the team with a stroke average of 45 for nine holes. Joe Demma and John Yager, '80, followed at 46.5 each; Scott Hensley, '80, and Mike Morrison, senior, averaged 47 and 49, respectively.

Albright said, "We played our best golf in the tournaments." Northwest placed fourth in the Manual Invitational, seventh in the city, and seventh in the sectionals.

"I went to the prom because it was at the Hilton and I wanted to see what it was like-for once it wasn't at the Athletic Club. It was very rewarding to see that for one night our students could be like ladies and gentlemen. Y'all shocked me half to death!

The dance was nice, the music was nice. Reggie and I-we were just friends, and he could have gone to the moon for all I cared, 'cause I was there. I went to the prom!"

Cast “paints” top performance

For six long weeks some of the busiest students at Northwest could be found on the stage, rehearsing and re-rehearsing the 1980 spring musical, "Paint Your Wagon."

"It all paid off the night of the performance," said Sally Perkins, junior. "Everyone felt real excited, especially during make-up. In the last performance everyone was like a unit."

Written by Allan Lerner and Frederick Lowe, "Paint Your Wagon" told the story of a gold miner named Ben Rumson (played by Doug Whetstone, '80) and his daughter Jennifer (portrayed by Twila Snyder, junior) who strike it rich and build a town.

"The musical was a big success," said Snyder. "The audience seemed to enjoy the play. It takes a great cast and crew to have a great show, and everyone was very close."

Directed and choreographed by Linda Davis, French teacher, the musical was presented March 21 and 22, 1980. Both audiences gave the production a standing ovation.

"We did well each night," said Perkins. "It's strange—you can always tell the different audiences; different ones laugh at different jokes. I think they liked both performances, though."

Richards takes two titles

On a windy spring evening in May, Damon Richards, '80, assumed the self-proclaimed title, "Monarch of the Little 500," as he rode to his fourth consecutive championship in the annual bicycle race.

"I wanted to ride the whole race myself," said Richards, but Little 500 rules forbade his doing so. Still, he rode half of the 20-mile event, his team controlling the race start-to-finish. Other members of the winning boys' team included Joe Berry, Mike Golobich, and Bryan Hanft, '80.

Along with the boys' race, the Little 500, sponsored by Student Council, included a full evening of activities. Pre-race festivities included entertainment by the student rock-jazz group "Trademark," and the crowning of race royalty Tina Matthews, senior, and Richards.

Official scorer Lynn Mills, senior, closely watches the outcome of the girls' bike race

Racing was next on the agenda. Although a lack of participation by the girls hurt the race, according to chief sponsor Ralph Horn, the racing was good.

"We once had as many as 43 girls teams," said Horn. "This year we only had 12."

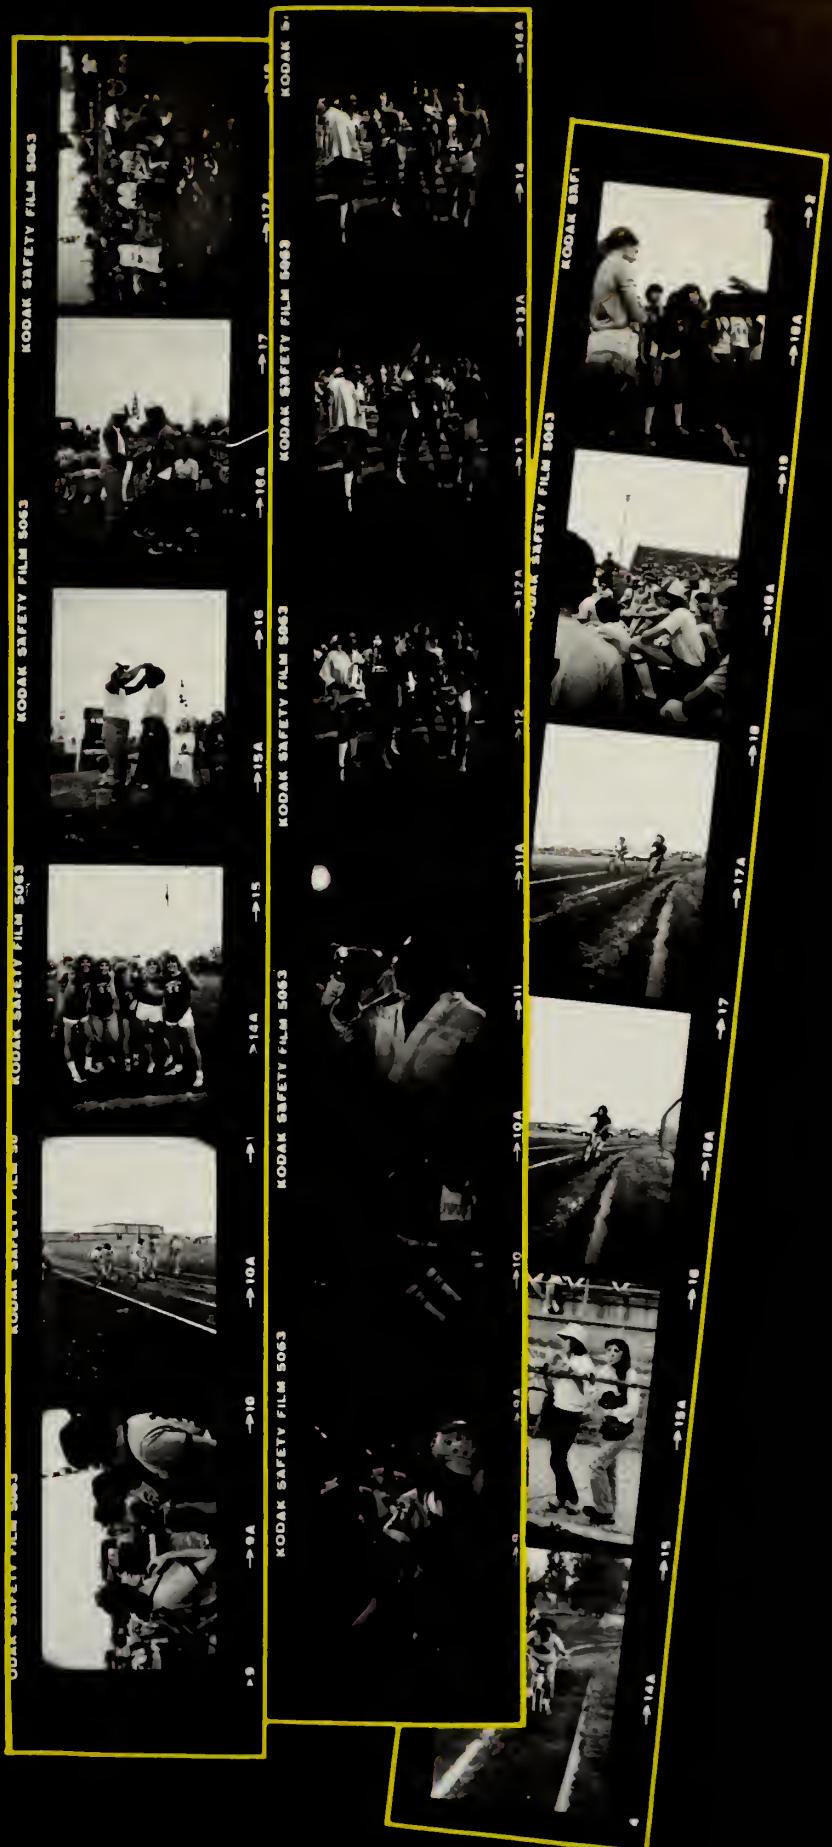

Team number 11 peddled to victory in the two-lap final heat. Deanna Peterson and Pam Whitesell, seniors, and Ronda Miller and Twila Snyder, juniors, comprised the winning squad.

In the boys' race Horn said he saw one of the better races ever at Northwest. At one point in the race James "Cliff" Curl, '80, with his team running eighth, drafted Richards for six laps.

"I saw someone riding on my tail," said Richards. "I thought he was from the second place team because of his shirt color. After fighting him off for six laps I found out it was Curl, who was two laps behind me!"

Team five crossed the finish line two-and-a-half laps ahead of competition giving Golobich and Richards their fourth first place trophies.

Team six rider Bill Emmons, senior, said, "Next year's race should be closer ... Damon will be gone!"

C hanges enhance prom

"The prom was exciting. Being with a person you cared for and spending an evening dancing was fun. It was really special," said Seanne Fisher, junior.

May 3, 1980 brought many changes to the prom. Instead of the traditional dance at the Indianapolis Athletic Club, the prom was moved to the Grand Ballroom of the Downtown Hilton and became a dinner-dance, costing $25 per couple.

"I feel the theme, "Let's Find The Time For Love," was a good one," said Mary Lewis, prom coordinator. "Most of the 300 who attended seemed to enjoy themselves."

However, Brad Pate, senior, said, "There was about one hour or so when absolutely nothing was going on. No band, no nothing. My girlfriend got sleepy!"

"The committee knew what they were doing," said Fisher.

"To me there were no flaws."

A nother one bites the mud

Homecoming 1980: consider one of the 20th century's biggest mysteries: do Huskies really boat?

After a year's absence and a lot of complaints, class faculty returned with a bang-and a splash. Throughout most of the Oct. 17 Homecoming game against Broad Ripple, rain and mud drenched not only football players, band members, and spectators, but boats too.

"Watching the band end in the mud at halftime with their white boots on was funny," said Greg Morris, junior.

The rain started early in the day, forcing the afternoon pep session into the gym and canceling a preview of the floats.

During the pep session, the seniors fed the juniors in the spirit cheer.

rowing game as they did to a precarious 7-6 football lead competition. Although much of the class of '81 didn't stay for the assembly, a husky-voiced section of football players set the Senior Class to its invi yeling victory in years.

Football was next on the agenda. The Pioneers, 7-1 on the season, took on the Loyal Rockies who had lost seven of their eight contests. The poor weather, however, kept Northwest's high-powered line last fall, resulting in the slender, plump final score, 21-0.

During Homecoming week, Sarah Covington, junior, strikes a pose in her 50's attire.

Working overtime on the junior float, Jerri Moon, junior, completes a goal post.

Mud continued . . .

"We tried to get all of the classes involved," said Student Council member Kevin Spencer, junior. "This is how all of the other schools are doing it now."

Student Council also added "Spirit Week" to the Homecoming festivities. The four days included "50's Day," "Come As You Aren't Day," "Clash Day," and "Green Day." James Williams, senior, culminated "Come As You Aren't" when he dressed as a girl.

"I thought he was a girl when I first saw him," said Mildred Ryan, social studies teacher.

Carrie Butters, senior, said, "In the last three years there never was anything really exciting about Homecoming. I felt if I dressed up, I really got into the Homecoming spirit."

Another way of student involvement was the building of the floats, and their traditional egging.

Pam Rogers, junior, said, "Everyone was working towards one goal . . . a great-looking float."

With the theme of "Cripple the Ripple"

Rockets," the seniors won the float competition. Because the public address equipment had to be moved out of the rain, Don King, principal, had to scream the announcements to the crowd of 1500.

"I didn't even hear him say that the seniors had won," said Lori Cummings, senior. "But I knew we would because we were the best!"

Darrell Stewart and Deanna Petersen, seniors, were named king and queen of the evening, and their court included Greg Norris and Lisa Pryor, juniors; David Conn and Pam Stewart, sophomores; and Kirt Dannenbrink and Theresa Colliers, freshmen.

And in the second half, behind the slashing running of Randy Hobbs and Jay O'Riley, seniors, the Pioneers scored twice to down Broad Ripple, 22-6.

The rain even let up for a little while in the second half. By the way, floats definitely are not seaworthy. "Ours (float) sort of melted in the rain," said Heidi Harris, sophomore.

Applying "her" make-up, James Williams, senior, makes the final touches on his "come as you aren't" outfit.

and Elton John, performing good old rock-n-roll.

Kevin Daily, senior, said, "I really enjoyed the Angela Bofill concert because it was the type of music I wanted to hear—slow jazz. It was a change."

East meets West

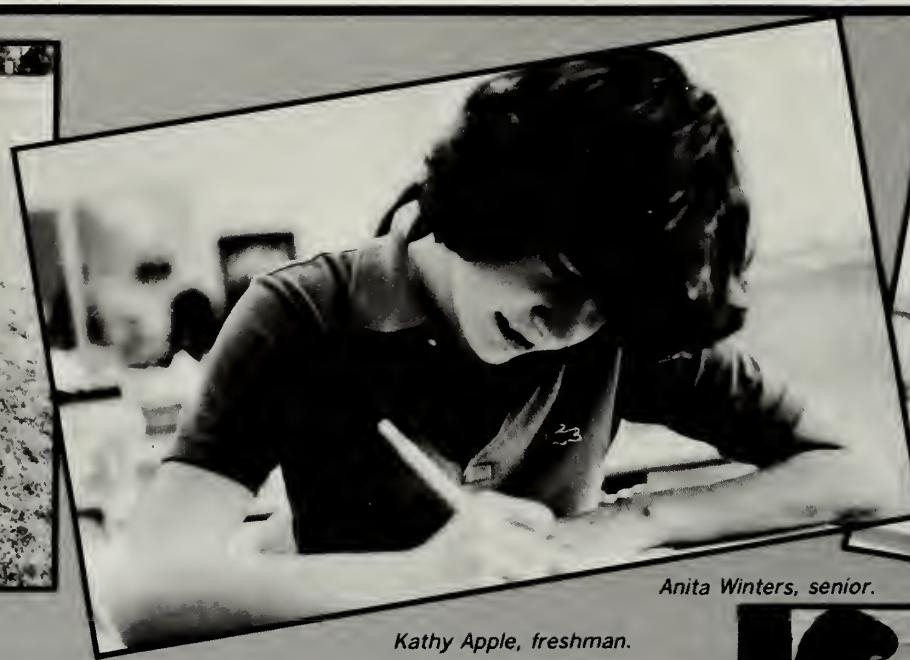

In a clash of the coasts, the East's "preppy look" challenged the West's "urban cowboy" craze for the chic championship of Northwest High School.

Modeling himself after the prep school students of the East Coast, the conservative dresser nonchalantly looked to such names as Calvin Klein, Gloria Vanderbilt, Izod, and Pierre Cardin for outerwear. Brand names became important to him as he donned his Top Siders (deck shoes), bobby socks, Oxford shirts, blazers, and pullovers and ties.

"I paid about thirteen dollars for my Izod blouse," said Kathy Apple, freshman. "but if you dress the right way, guys pay more attention to you."

"My cowboy boots are the real thing. Leather, not plastic. They did cost $65 though," said Valicia Franklin, sophomore.

Curious comedy is fall play

Under a new director, the Pioneer Players and Thespians presented their fall drama, "The Curious Savage."

"The cast worked together as a cohesive unit," said director James Waymire, art teacher. "They made my first directing job much easier than it could have been."

The play, an off-beat comedy, focuses on a widow, Mrs. Ethel Savage played by Sally Perkins, junior, trying to keep $10 million she inherited from the late Mr. Savage away from her three greedy step-children.

The step-children commit Mrs. Savage to the Cloisters, a home for the eccentric, in hopes of claiming the money.

Clutching her stuffed bear (where she's hidden $10 million in bonds), Mrs. Savage, played by Sally Perkins, junior, enters the sanitarium during the fall drama.

Playing the children were: Troy Schmidt, senior, as Senator Titus Savage; Lisa Pryor, junior, as Lily Belle Savage; and Todd Bridges, junior, Judge Samuel Savage.

Mrs. Savage gets the last laugh, however, by taking the money to the Cloisters in a teddy bear. As the children seek the money, she makes new friends and a new life for herself.

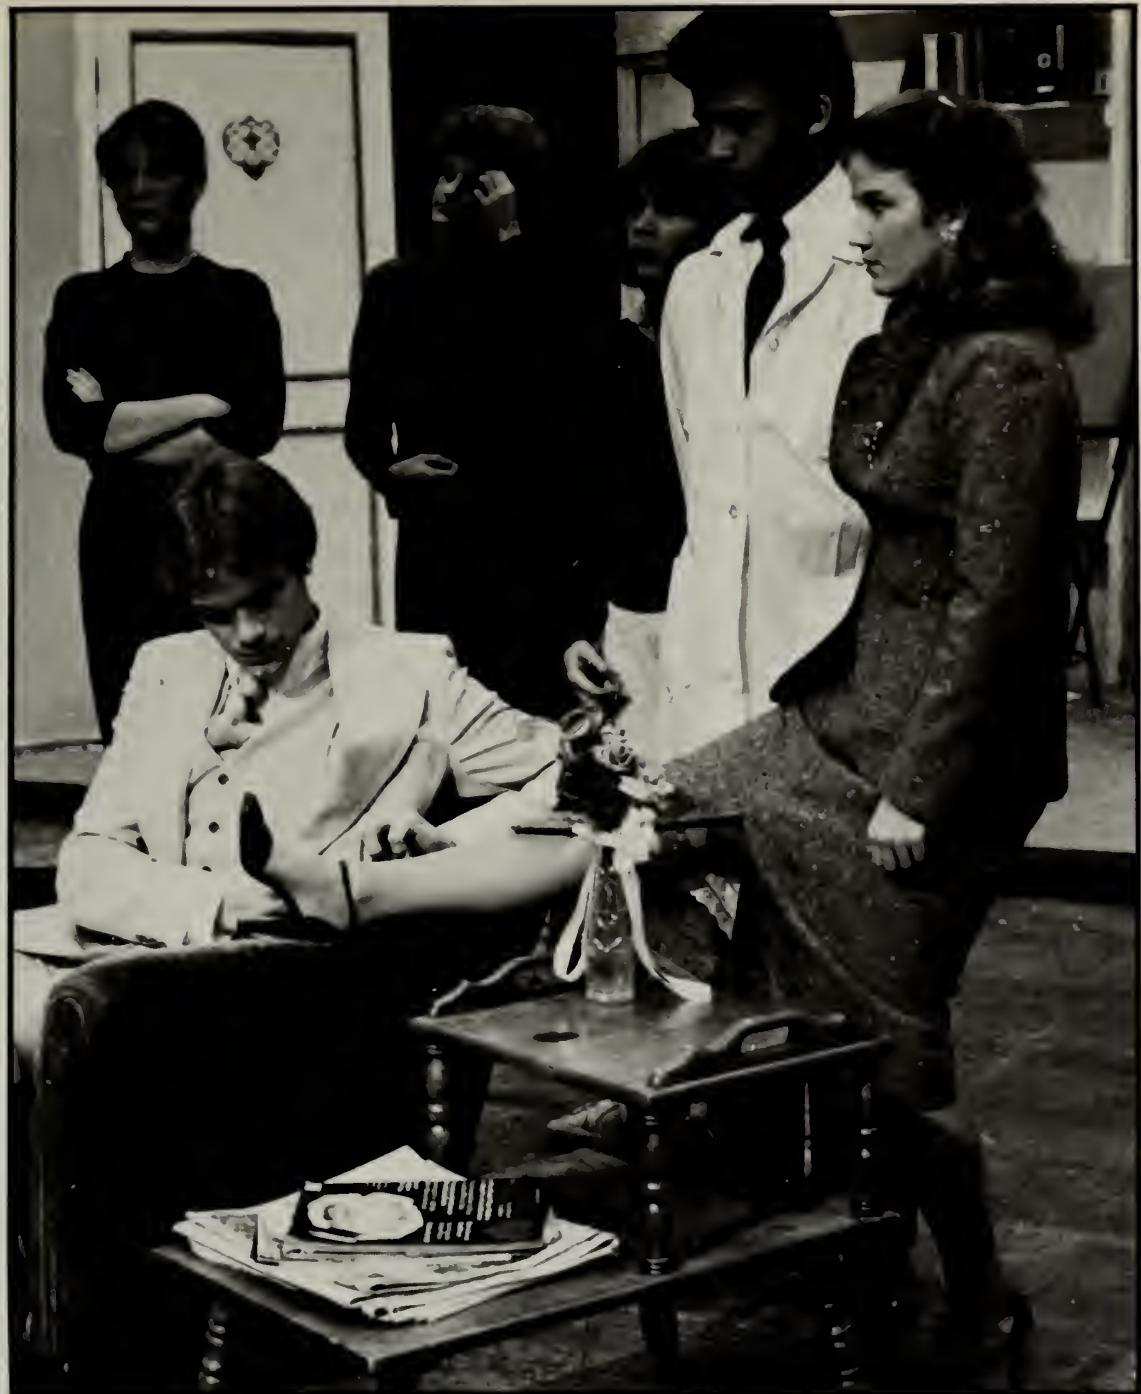

Playing characters in the Cloisters were: Scott Brooks, senior, Hannibal; Kristi Crump, senior, Fairy May; Rick Byarley, senior, Jeffrey; and Sarah Covington, junior, Mrs. Paddy.

Staff members were played by Keven Spencer, junior, as Dr. Emmett and Ruth Arnold, sophomore, as Miss Willie.

"It was hard to stay in character in the play because it was so funny," said Pryor.

Sarah Covington, junior, paints "the ocean" as her character in "The Curious Savage."

Malice with thought: one car smashing into another; a knife piercing her breast; a knife piercing his.

"Take care of yourself ... call me?"

"Goodbye."

Romance 'big deal' for teen couples

"I enrolled in summer school before I entered Northwest. Every freshman who wishes to be in the band must take summer school to learn how to march.

"The first day in class was unforgettable. I noticed a guy by the name of Scott Brown (senior).

"One day, the band was told to perform for the summer graduation at Tech High School in August. Before we left, Scott came over to me and asked me for a hug. I thought everyone who was in band gave each other hugs, so I gave him one. Then, as we were getting ready to leave Tech, he asked me for another hug.

"A few days later, Scott asked me to go with him. That happened on August 23, 1979. Our relationship is still going strong."

— Kasey Baker, sophomore

"School is not the place for hand holding!" Such are the immortal words that high school couples dread. Just a simple little stroll down the hallway can take strategic planning, knowing where to hold hands and where not.

Most Northwest couples know key places for holding hands. For instance, social studies wing is a good wing to chance a complete hallway without letting go. One major precaution, however, is Coach Reichel's whistle.

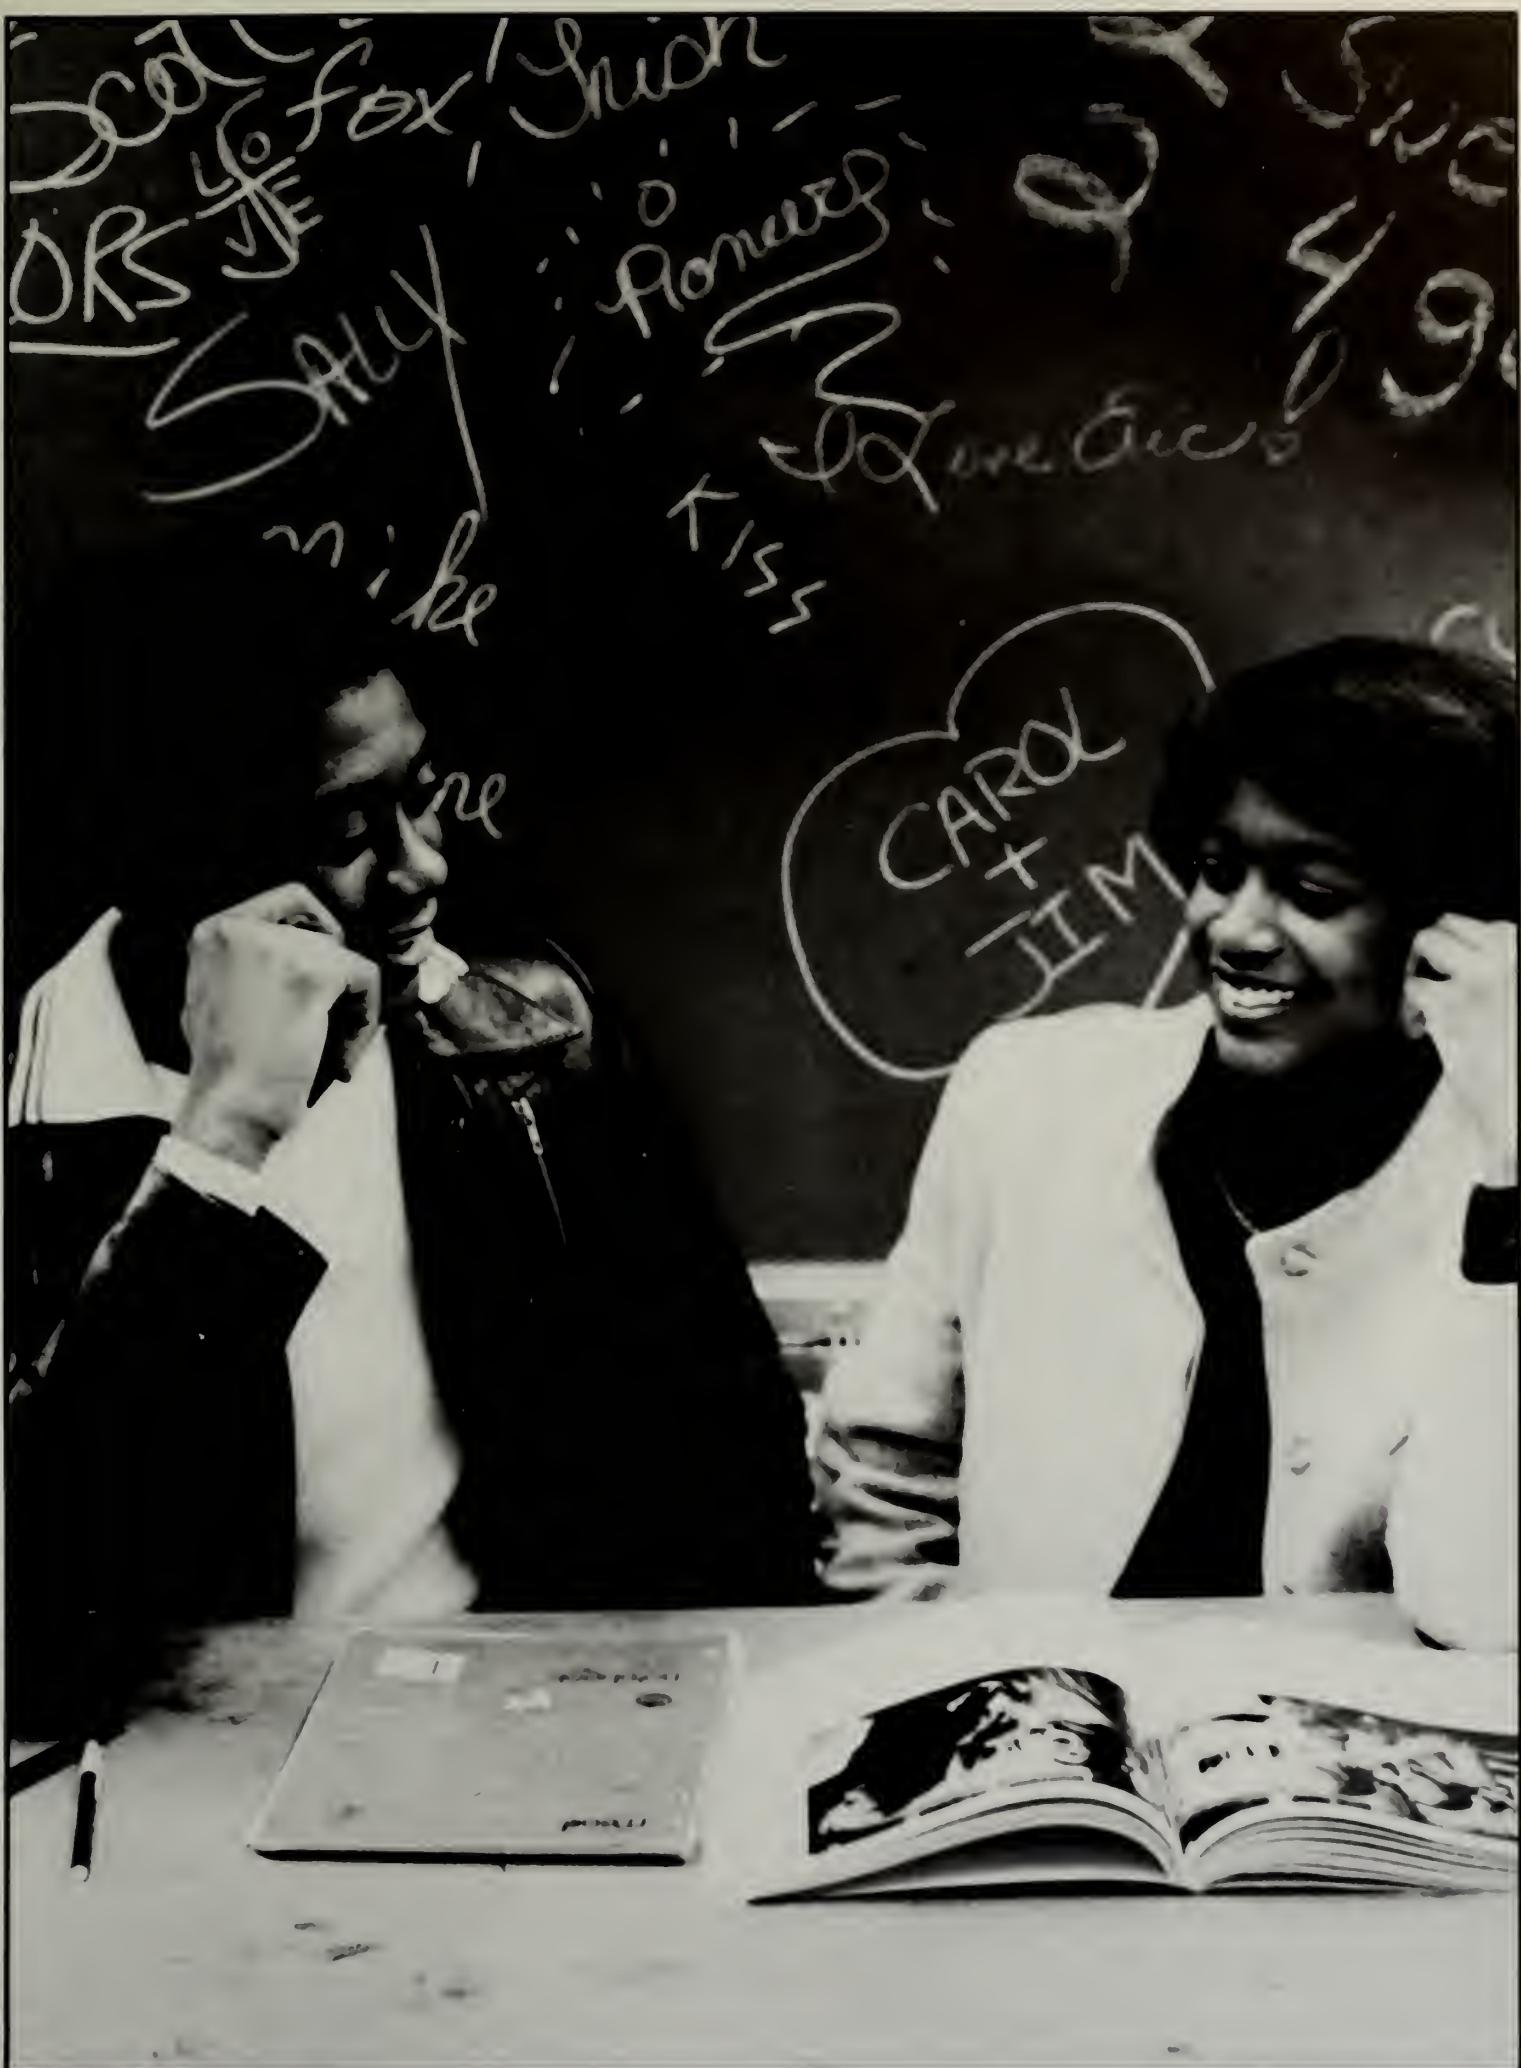

Danger areas include the art wing, with flag woman Mrs. Whitaker and the math wing, with Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Saler, and Mr. Lash working as the new mod squad.

To high school sweethearts, life is a series of "what movie do you want to see?" or "where do you want to go tonight?" Nothing alters the course of a life quite like going with someone.

They share lockers and dream of wedding rings, families and homes. Teachers just shake their heads; they're "in love."

Gruffy's Diner strikes

"... And tonight Gruffy is dining at Northwest High School's cafeteria."

"Good evening. My bosses at the newscenter tried to kill two birds with one stone with this story — they wanted to both cover Gruffy's Delicatessen and find out why high school students cut their lunch periods.

"I think I've discovered why, too. It's called a fritter — a quaint little delicacy, but lethal. It's served in a bone-dry bun. Perhaps that's why the ketchup and mustard are so runny.

"They just installed a new malt machine here at Northwest. It's really worth it, too — for only 50 cents you can stand in line half an hour and have a nice glass of frozen chocolate milk. Truly one of life's simple pleasures.

"I chose the roast beef manhattan and thought they should have left it in New York. Photographer Rick Enis braved the fritter and two cartons of milk. He started choking, but I think he said the milk was fine.

"Northwest's cafeteria is definitely a four skull-and-crossbone restaurant. Remember, jars of poison only earn one skull. It's open on weekdays, 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Reservations aren't necessary, just ample courage."

Lori Oattes, junior, tries out the new "fast food" lunch line in the cafeteria.

With intense concentration, Kurt Dannenbrink, freshman, follows the actions of a pinball.

Mrs. James Berger attends the fall sports banquet with her husband, the freshman football coach.

Mates make mark

When Northwest hired a new teacher, it sometimes gained a "better half," too. Teachers' spouses often found themselves spending a lot of time at NHS.

"My wife comes to our games," said girls' basketball coach Jim Albright, Science teacher. "She watches my coaching. Sometimes I mess up — maybe I don't take someone out or put someone in. She always lets me know about it later."

The wife of athletic director Charles Leamon, science teacher, could always be found in the ticket booth at sporting events. And the wife of Russell Green, industrials arts teacher, spent as much time at Northwest as he did — she's Sue Green, business teacher.

"My wife comes in a lot," said Robert Burns, math teacher. "But only on pay days."

Invaders big hit

The musical buzz-splat of "Space Invaders" quickly spread as the fad in electronic games. A screenful of attackers rapidly fire upon the player's bases, while he quickly retaliates.

"It's fun because it's a real challenge — you against the machine," said Joyce Weiser, junior. "I should know, I have one at home."

In supermarkets, arcades, and rollerskating rinks, a Space Invaders machine could be found with people crowded around it. Unlike pinball, the player can never win; after he clears the screen, the invaders repeat in full force.

Starting down a dark passage, Ron Hicks, senior, leads the way at the physics class' spelunking trip.

Harris model pro

Among the "best dressed at Northwest," Patrick Harris, senior, stood tall. Harris had good reason to know the latest fashions — he was, after all, a professional model.

"I (modelled) for the money," said Harris. "I did get to meet a lot of different people ... a lot of high class people."

Some of Harris's employers included L.S. Ayres, Florsheim Shoes, Harry Levinson, and Zales. By 1981 he already had two years' experience under his Pierre Cardin belt.

Patrick Harris, junior, walks through crowd gathered to see new male fashions.

Black hole reality

After spending two hours in a far-from-comfortable school bus, we arrived at our destination: Sullivan's Cave, just south of Bloomington. A short hike down a grassy hill, and there it was. A hole. Not a huge yawning cavern carved majestically in a mountainside, but a dirty black hole. Mr. Canner had to be kidding.

He just chuckled (somewhat evilly) and our physics class descended into the pit. What we encountered surprised me, as we crawled, dug, swam, and trudged through four miles of a fascinating dungeon.

I'll never forget losing my footing climbing up a damp wall from the third level, or Mr. Ragucci grabbing my arm before I killed myself. And wading through that FREEZING water ... brrr!

Sullivan's Cave was an experience — at least it was more memorable than listening to a dull physics lecture.

Swails spittin' image

"I chew tobacco. If you don't blow smoke on me, I won't spit on you."

"Going smokeless" has become more and more popular after television advertising campaigns. Chewing tobacco has evolved into winter green, peppermint, and raspberry flavors.

"I used to smoke, and chewing tobacco helped me stop smoking," said Danny Swails, senior.

The tobacco chewer could pick from leaf tobacco, like Levi Garrett or Union Station, or snuff tobacco such as Skoal, Copenhagen, or Happy Days.

"I chew Skoal or Levi Garrett," said Swails. "It gives me the flavor I want."

Just don't blow smoke in his face.

Tobacco chewer, Danny Swails, senior, demonstrates the art of hitting a mark.

Pilar exchanges homes

"Where are you from?"

"Colombia," answered Pilar Azuero, senior.

"Really?" they asked.
"Wow ... where's that?"

For 11 months Azuera, a Spanish exchange student, lived with the family of Jacqui Crouse, senior, as part of the Youth for Understanding program.

"It all started when I had mono two years ago," said Crouse. "I was home watching television and I saw a commercial for Youth for Understanding. My family wrote them and we heard from them last summer." Seniors Jacqui Crouse and Pilar Azuero, exchange student from Colombia staying with Crouse's family, show their best on Senior dress-up day.

summer."

Azuera said that school was the biggest difference from Colombia (a large South American Country), where she attended an all-girl, all-Catholic high school. Her brother, however, attended Purdue.

"My second day here Jacqui taught me how to use a toaster," said Azuera. "She said, 'put the bread in here, push this button,' and I just nodded. Then I said, 'Jacqui, we have toasters in Colombia. They thought I was from the jungle or something.'

Sharpening his table tennis skill, Jeff Buttons, junior, practices outside the gym.

Playing on button

Jeff Buttons, junior, started playing table tennis when he was tall enough to see over the table.

For four hours a night, three to four nights a week, Button swatted ping pong balls at the Indianapolis Table Tennis Club. He has also played in major tournaments, including the World Table Tennis Tournament at Oklahoma City.

"There were people there from all over the world," Button recalled. "I played against some excellent players and got to watch some excellent players play."

Although Button said he enjoyed the game, he did not intend to play table tennis professionally.

"If I wanted to play professionally I'd have to live the game in order to be as good as the guys who practice continuously."

Snyder 'miss' haps

Twila Snyder, junior, had her share of mishaps during her three year stay at Northwest High School.

"I fall a lot. You know, during volleyball, down stairs," said Snyder.

During her freshman year, after having done exercises to loosen up for Swing Choir, Snyder was so loose that she fell down and sprained her wrist.

Snyder's most memorable fall was during a Swing Choir dance. She slipped off the stage and badly bruised her leg and elbow.

"That fall was not entirely my fault," Snyder commented. "After all, how Twila Snyder, junior, kisses the ground after a mishap at the Little 500.

was I to know the pit was there?"

Snyder's most recent Northwest tumble occurred during the girl's Little 500—her team still finished first, however.

That's the breaks

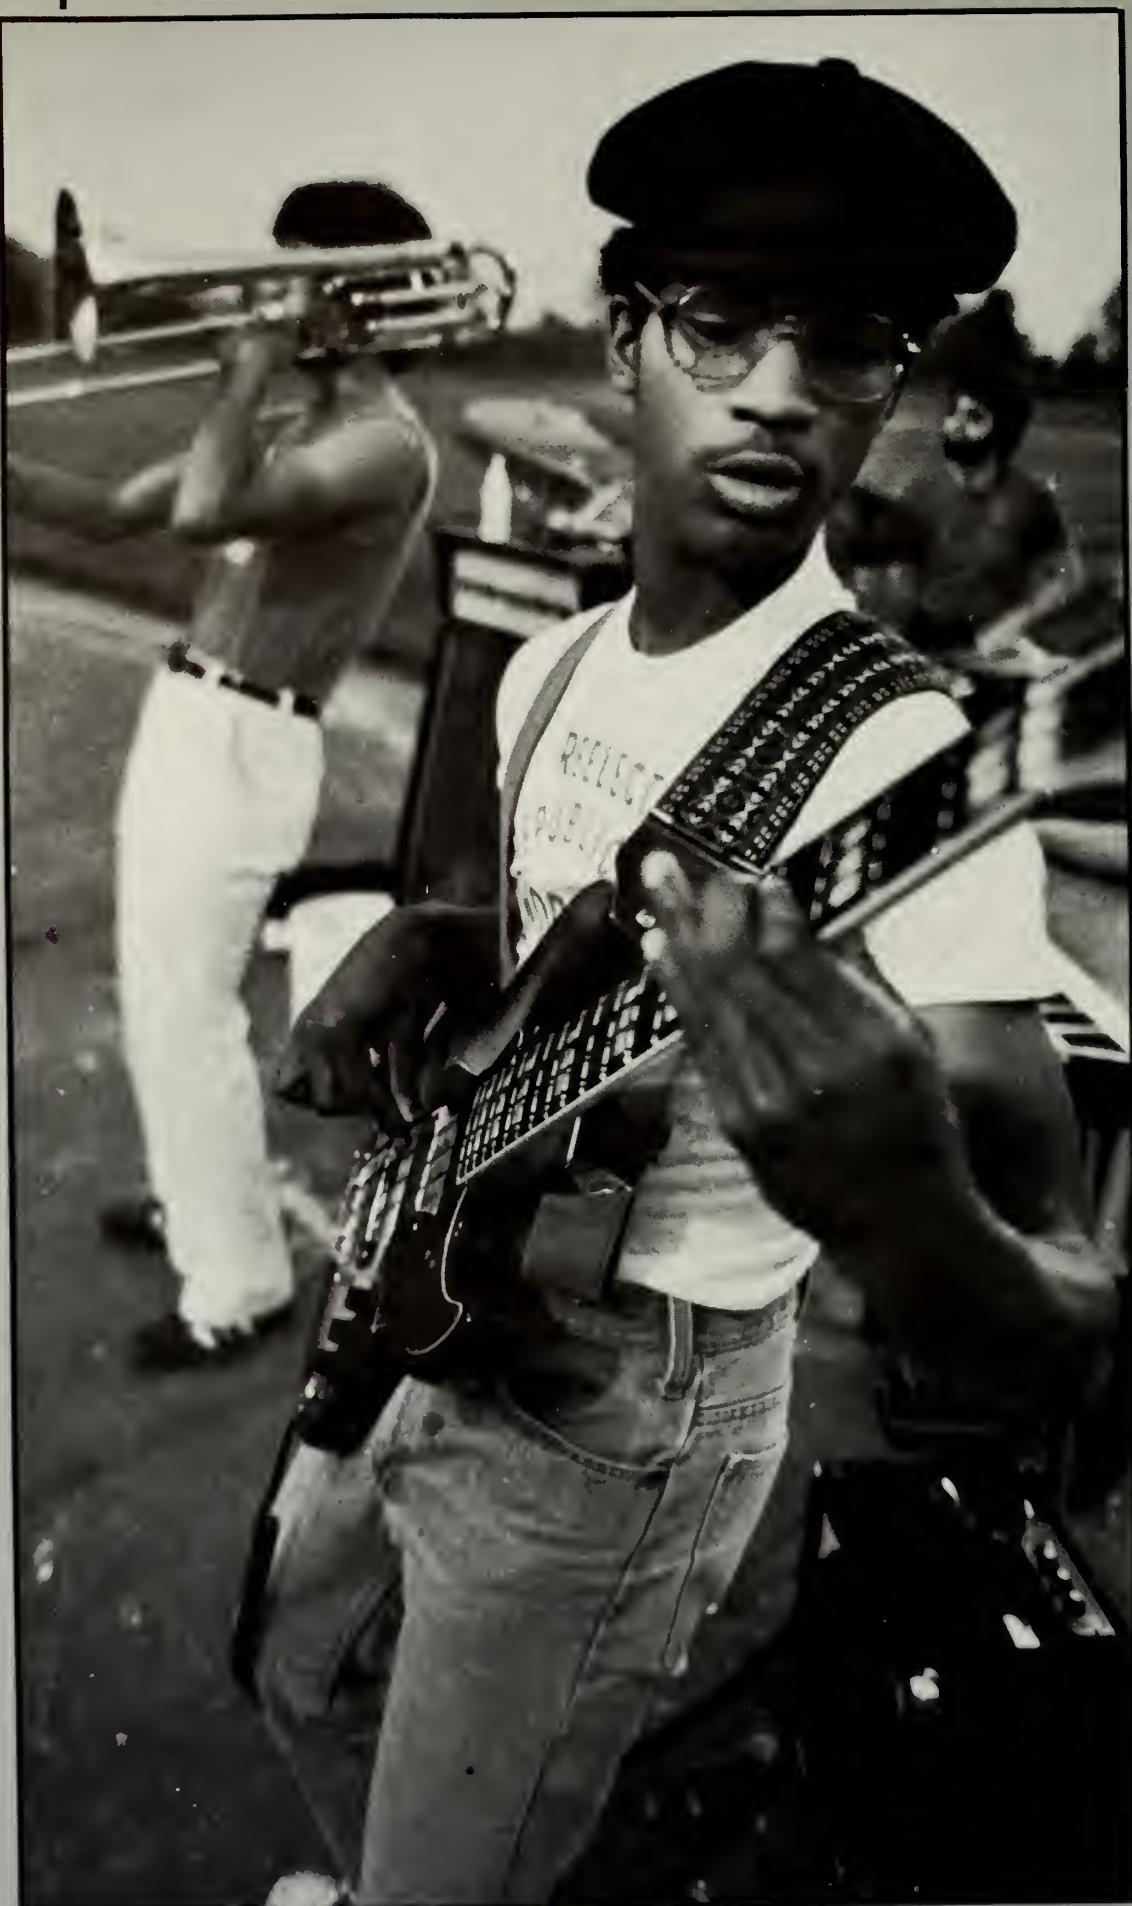

As varsity wrestling coach, Ronald Reichel, social studies teacher, sometimes chews out his wrestlers and personally demonstrates the correct way to complete a maneuver. Kevin Dailey, senior, made him pay for it.

"I was showing Dailey how to do a takedown," said Reichel. "Next thing I knew I was laying on the floor with my foot in a 45° angle."

"I hate coaches," Dailey said.

As Reichel was waiting for the ambulance, he informed Dailey, "You'd better not lose a match all season, or I'll beat you with my crutches."

To give his foot a rest, Ron Reichel props up his foot while going over a paper with senior Linda Beard.

Trademark guitarist, Dave Wilkerson, senior, plays at the Little 500

Trademark jams

At the 1980 Little 500, a homegrown band revealed itself. "Trademark" belting out rock, jazz, and fusion sounds, performed its first big gig when it entertained during the bike race.

Trademark evolved from the Northwest music department. The six-piece group included trombonist Carl Davila, trumpeter Tom Harrison, and drummer Andy Leonard, '80; and keyboard man Scott Brown, saxophonist Mike DuValle, and bass guitarist Dave Wikerson, seniors.

"It was hard to get together for a good rehearsal because we had different lunch periods and all of us had jobs after school," said Brown.

They got it together though, and according to Wilkerson, "shined under the lights."

Leamon sports hero

For every hero, another stands in the shadows.

"If I had to say just one thing about Mr. Leamon it would be Mr. Athletics. He does everything. He's an ideal athletic director," said Bill Ritter, boys' basketball coach.

Leamon has been athletic director at NHS since the school opened in 1963.

His endless tasks included making schedules for every sport, purchasing the teams' equipment and uniforms, hiring referees, security and game personnel, arranging transportation for all NHS teams, and buying all the athletic awards.

"I've been trying to get a new gym here for five years," said Leamon. "Our basketball program is suffering because the team doesn't get enough practice time."

Spending time after school, Charlie Leamon, athletic director watches a freshman football game.

Sisters Jean Stock, junior, and Janice Stock, sophomore, move their feet to the beat of the Animal House, under 21 nightclub.

Moorhead gives more Dedicated parents often volunteer in the NHS concession stand. But Rose Moorhead was a little different: her youngest daughter graduated in 1973.

"I worked the concession stand for the kids," said Moorhead, a familiar sight at home basketball games. "I like to do it or I wouldn't have stayed there."

Moorhead said she planned to sell her last 30-cent coke at the final basketball game of 1981. She retired an 11-year veteran.

As part of her job at the concession stands, Rose Moorhead heads toward the south stand to check on supplies.

Paid to play

"While most people my age are washing dishes or making hamburgers, I get paid to play records," said Mike Parker, senior, who worked as a disc jockey at Animal House, an under 21 disco which opened in October.

Parker enjoyed his job because his friends visited the disco and although he was at work, it seemed like a party.

The Animal House brought in 300-400 people a night Thursday through Sunday. Parker said he felt a sense of power while DJing at the disco.

His job mainly involved deciding a format for the evening and choosing records to play that kept the people dancing. Parker also made announcements about future events at Animal House and every once in a while had a chance to "get a little silly."

"I can control the moods of the dancers just by what I play and the lights I use. I control the atmosphere," said Parker.

Disc Jockey for the Animal House, Mike Parker, senior, keeps customers dancing.

Dave Robinson, senior, stands on the sidelines waiting for the kicking team to be called on the field.

London bridges gap

"I played rugby in England. I remember watching one or two American football games on television and thinking 'no way will I ever play that; too rough.' "

David Robinson, senior, came to Northwest from England his sophomore year. He wasn't like most sophomores — his 6'2" frame didn't quite fit in, and he was two years younger than most. He talked funny — with a very distinct British accent. Classmates dubbed him "London" well, in his senior year "London" did something he swore he'd never do. He played American football and kicked well enough to become the varsity's place kicker.

"The first time we lined up under fire for an extra point, the holder put down the ball and he (Robinson) just stood there," said Compton. "The defense was coming in, so I blew the whistle. He said 'Coach, in rugby they can't come across the line until I kick the ball.' "

Robinson learned the game quickly though, and well enough to kick the deciding points in games against Manual and Ben Davis.

Working world no stranger

In the past 30 years, the number of 16-year-old males with jobs climbed from four to 27 percent while the percentage of working females of that age group jumped from one to 16 percent.

Studies by Ellen Greenberger and Laurance Steinberg of the University of California at Irvine showed that 10th graders could work only up to 14 hours per week before their grades began to drop, 11th graders only 20 hours. Grades really suffered among those students who worked between 25-40 hours per week. However, students who had the most difficulty learning at school seemed to learn more at work.

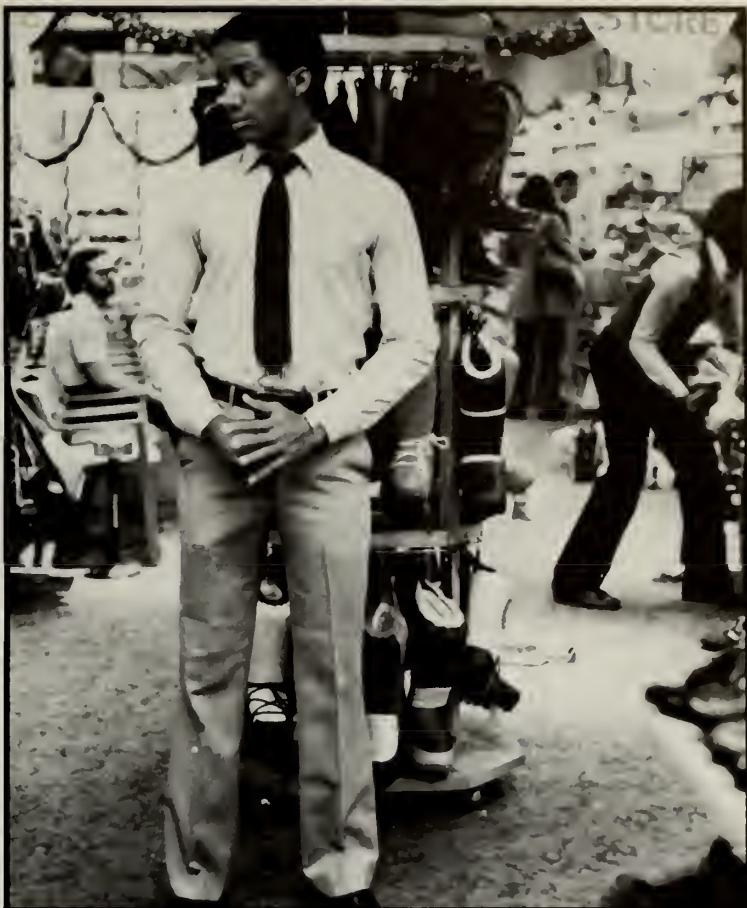

"A job teaches you responsibility," said

Wendy's employee Floyd Cunningham, junior.

"I work for money to spend on my car," said Mike Rabideau, junior.

Between gas prices and car insurance, Northwest students that drove spent a big percentage of their paychecks on the care and feeding of their automobiles. Although in 1978 consumers claimed they wouldn't pay $1 for a gallon of gasoline, in 1981 they found themselves shelling out $1.20 for OPEC'S refined black gold.

Teenagers were a significant portion of the U.S. work force in '80—significant enough to be of concern to the president.

President Ronald Reagan promised to ask Congress to waive the minimum wage law ($3.10 an hour through 1980), hoping to increase the number of teens working and stimulate the economy at the same time.

"Of course I wish students wouldn't work—it lowers grades," said Don King, principal. "But nowadays many of them must."

taking seriously things that simply aren't. But irrationality rules. What is one to think of a world in which the most difficult thing to do is to make the world behave rationally?"

— Sam Crider, senior

The one thing that worries me most is finding a job—there is absolutely no way to make it as a teenager without a job. I'm thinking about going to college at the New York Institute of Technology so I know I will have to work because it will cost over $6,000 a year and my mother won't be able to pay for everything."

— Stephanie Woodson, senior

One of my biggest concerns is my job. I think anyone graduating this year should be concerned with their job. So many teenagers graduate without any plans for the future. Many can't afford college, and all they have are part-time jobs. They have put off getting decent jobs, but now is yesterday's future.

The time is now to get a steady job, to make your future. My plans are to go to IUPUI part-time and continue my job as a secretary part-time. One way a student can work on a job for after graduation, is to get into COE during their senior year. COE makes you aware of the business world. It prepares you for a job later on. Some people such as me are asked to stay on their job after they graduate; we are the lucky ones. I believe it is very important to have plans for after high school.

— Jeff Kenton, senior

There aren't any serious situations today, just ridiculous ones that are problems only through their ridiculous handling. If rational solutions were applied to the world, the "serious concerns" would be revealed for what they are. The state of the world has arisen from its leaders

"I like to work; I like the money. I want to have things—clothes, shoes, materials for my car. But it takes too much time. I stay busy enough with the many activities that go on during a senior year. I need to work, though: for spending money, for money for college in case I don't get a scholarship in football, and for money to help out my parents. I notice that I'm getting pretty lazy with my homework; my grades have dropped a little. This year I had some outside of school projects I was unable to do which really hurt me. What I plan to do is to cut down some of my 24 hours at work to about 15 hours a week. Maybe I could have more time to spend with my homework and my family."

— Jeff Kenton, senior

"I feel the most serious concern today is the economic crisis that has gradually come about over the last few years. I think the sky-rocketing prices of goods and services and the feeling of not seeing an end to these rising prices has left a depressed feeling over the country. If prices don't stop climbing, the price of food and other necessities will get to the point where most people won't be able to survive. If something isn't done soon to control the economic problems of this country the American people might be in for a depression."

— Leroy Sharpe, senior

"I have as many responsibilities, if not more, than many adults. Learning and doing well in school is a full-time job. In addition I have a part-time job which entails many "adult" responsibilities. Spending time with my family is almost obsolete. My biggest concern now is to accomplish a major goal—going to college. With the outrageous costs of college education, it is going to be a big responsibility to pay the way. If an adult can work like I do, keep grades above average, keep some type of social life, and keep their health, let them be heard."

— Dan Hunt, senior

Problems bombard seniors

"Education, if nothing else, should be concerned with living-recognizing problems and dealing with them," said Robert Ludlow, senior guidance counselor.

Problems. A high school senior is bombarded constantly with problems. Worrying if his car will start on that frigid February morning, cramming for that big econ test, trying to figure out why his/her girlfriend/boyfriend refuses to call; unfortunately, those are just the universal, minor troubles of the 18-year-old. Major decisions confronted the senior of 1981: sex decisions and college decisions.

Meanwhile, Uncle Sam threatened to decide for him.

Daniel Callahan, author of 11 Million Teenagers, wrote, "One of the main difficulties of being a teenager is sex, at once a great discovery, a great mess, a great pleasure, a great frustration, and an all-around muddle."

Pregnancy was a big concern of high school students, as marriage and premarital sex had become a part of the lives of some. While "Seventeen" magazine insisted that teens were well aware of birth control methods, over one million teenage girls (almost 10% of those in the country) became pregnant in 1980-and over 600,000 of them actually gave birth. Congress allocated over $68 million toward promoting sex education in U.S. high schools in 1979.

"(Pregnancy) is definitely a problem here at Northwest," said Ludlow.

Infant mortality was twice as high among babies born to mothers age 15 as those with mothers ages 20-24. Also, teenage girls were five times more likely to die during childbirth than women in their twenties.

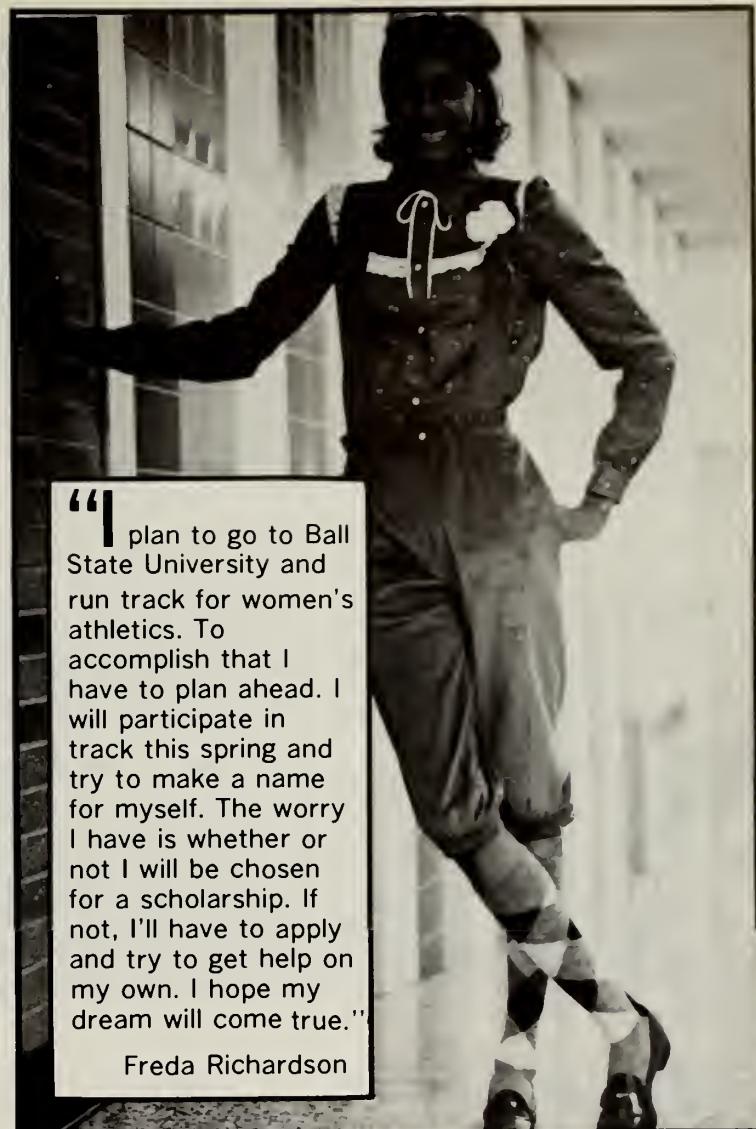

Experts also pointed out the important statistic that premature parenthood often forced the father and mother to end thoughts of a college education. And in the 1980's, a college degree was fast becoming mandatory for success.

"We (society) create a false sense of security where the high school diploma is concerned," said Ludlow. "In the world out there, it's not really worth peaches."

Ludlow expected 40 percent of NHS seniors to attend four-year colleges immediately after graduation.

College costs for the fall semester of 1981 ranged from $1500 at IUPUI to $8000 at some prominent east coast colleges. Only about 10 percent of incoming freshmen received actual scholarships, and many required financial aid, in the form of loans and grants.

Not everyone moved on to college, however. Traditionally, 20 percent of NHS graduates enter two-year business, trade, or

"I plan to go to Ball State University and run track for women's athletics. To accomplish that I have to plan ahead. I will participate in track this spring and try to make a name for myself. The worry I have is whether or not I will be chosen for a scholarship. If not, I'll have to apply and try to get help on my own. I hope my dream will come true."

Freda Richardson

technical schools, and another 35 percent directly join the work forces-often simply increasing their hours on a part-time job held while in high school. The remaining five percent enter the military.

The armed forces needed their five percent and more. By 1980, when Congress re-enacted military draft registration, the U.S. Ready Reserve had dwindled to 255,000-far below the 800,000 deemed necessary by army officials.

With the resuming of registration and the growing turmoil in the Middle East, the resurrection of the draft itself loomed as a possibility in the near future.

Don Mumford, junior, said, "It doesn't matter what I think of the draft.

I'd go, but I wouldn't have much choice anyway."

So, the high school student of the 1980's faced a number of problems. Trying to earn his diploma was only one of them.

May the force be with us

With a swing of its all-mighty axe, the Indianapolis Board of School Commissioners announced the closing of Shortridge High School, effective for the fall of 1981.

Declining enrollment and tightened budgets forced the decision, which followed three heated, controversial months of activity. In January the school board appointed a 37-member citizens' task force to examine the city's ten high schools and recommend at least one for closing.

On Jan. 14, 1981, NHS became the second high school viewed by a 12-person sub-division of the main task force.

In late February the task force announced an unexpected, detailed report. Their top two suggestions were: 1) Crispus Attucks High School would be shut down and its students would be placed at Northwest. Also, Northwest would be renamed Crispus Attucks. 2) Broad Ripple would also be closed with those students shifting to Shortridge High School.

Northwest students resented the proposed name change, the ripple and Attucks students were much more furious over the decision. Factions from those schools jammed the next school Board meeting.

When students filed into school the next morning, they learned of the School Board's own controversial plan: Shortridge and Marshall would close.

Less than 14 hours after the initial board announcement, however, Commissioner Richard Guthrie withdrew his vote and called a special meeting. All 10 schools prepared a 15 minute presentation for the all-important March 2 school board conference.

Each school brought an 18 member delegation to the conference and was permitted a 15-minute time slot to present its side of the controversy.

Northwest also brought its band, which marched around the Education Center for two hours playing the school song. Overall, an estimated 80 people represented NHS, either inside or outside the conference room.

At 10 p.m. Commissioner Don Larsen announced that no decision would be made that evening. Northwest spoke last and the meeting adjourned at 11:30 p.m. The next day the board rejected its earlier plan to close Marshall. However, it clung to its one real decision to close Shortridge, with a unanimous 7-0 vote.

Showing their school spirit, Kevin Spencer, junior, Vickie Stedman, sophomore, and Kathy Graham, senior, attend a school board hearing.

Band member Ruth Arnold, sophomore, holds a sign claiming her school the best.

Supporting their school at the task force hearings, Tim Miller, junior, Tobiasa Gray and Susan Edwards, freshmen, and Gerald Roberts, senior, discuss school problems and remedies.

The car of Lisa Pryor, junior, becomes a moving statement for NHS.

F aces

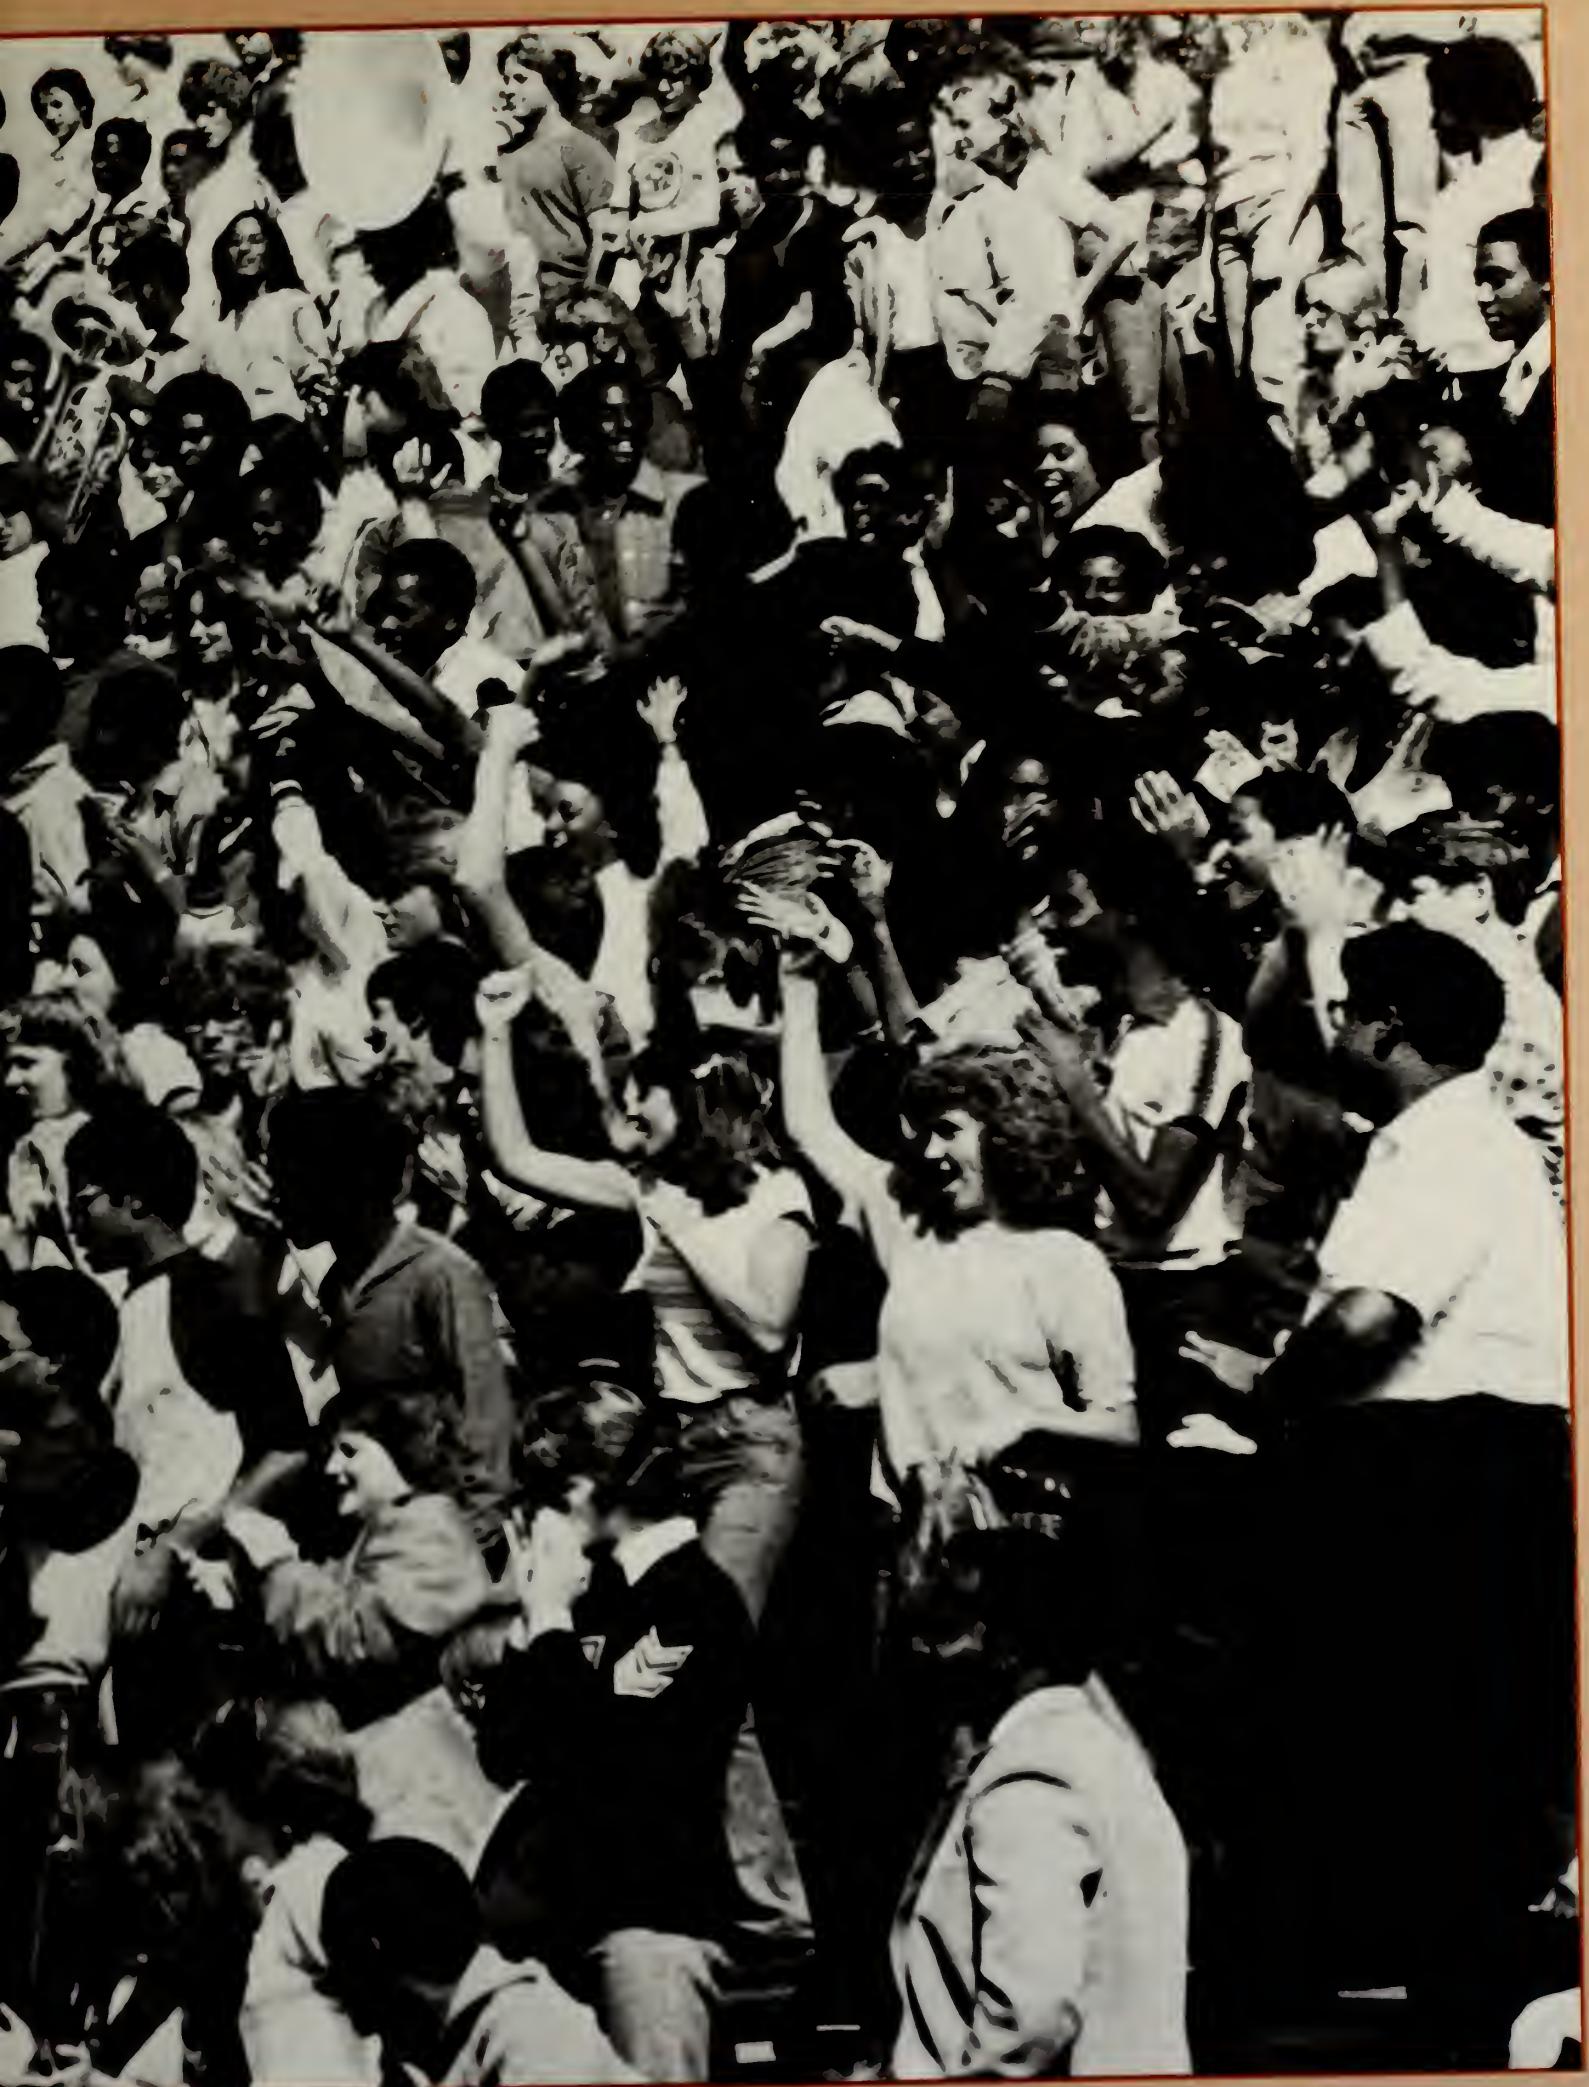

"The things I remember most about high school were my friends and the crazy things we did. My best friend was Coy Fisher and he was a real nut. Our biggest thrills were getting girl friends and trying to steal them away from each other. Besides girls our love was for our first car. It was his car but we both owned it. We must have driven it a thousand miles each day and two thousand on Saturday. It was one of those cars where you would drive as fast as you could before it stalled. What a great time we had in high school!"

The eyes of 2020 students steal a glance at the clocks every few seconds now. It's 2:50, Friday afternoon. The teacher begins to babble a little faster about the election of 1884, but he's lost his audience.

'Just another year' passed quickly. Study halls, physics tests, part-time jobs, touch-down passes, blue ribbons, lunch lines, deans' conferences, Levis, bubble gum, blue slips, Big Macs, fritters, freshmen ... Northwest's vital, everyday aspects survived 1980-81. Bigger changes shaped the year.

Conclusion . . .

The U.S. gained a new president, while Northwest crowned its own version, a lovable King. The football team made a name for the school.

John Lennon died. A task force invaded and threatened to close Northwest, with a decision due in March. Popular, veteran teachers Robert Burns, math, Helen Miles, art, and Allan Sheets, science, departed for different fields. The school clocks still didn't work.

After 444 days in captivity, the American hostages in Iran were released. Jim Plunkett led the Oakland Raiders to a big Super Bowl win over Philadelphia. Keith Price, senior, was semi-state heavyweight wrestling champion. The yearbook got published.

"How much time do we have left?" inquires the teacher.

"Two minutes," respond the students in force, a signal for everyone to close his book. The teacher sighs.

"Read chapter 25 for Monday . . ." he begins as the bell sounds. Students race to the door, elbowing for position.

Halls and stairways fill, jam, and empty. The clack-clack-clacking of slammed locker doors ceases quickly.

Northwest- like you may never see it again

"Around May the lull really hits. Senioritis, they call it. There's no bigger waste of time than sitting in a hot government class on a spring day.

"There are so many things to do — commencement plans, the Little 500, the Indy 500's going on, saying good-bye to everyone ...

"Then there's the senior yearbook party. That's what I'll never forget. You try to write something special and personal in everyone's, but it all comes out the same: take it easy, let's get together, keep in touch, don't forget me. You try to kid yourself that things won't change, but you know they will. You're face-to-face with life, like you've never seen it before. That's scary.

"This years seniors were extra-special, because it looked like we might have been "Northwest's" last graduating class with discussion of renaming it Attucks next fall. That announcement really took a lot out of the year. That didn't happen this year, but for seniors it was Northwest — like we would never see it again."

— Chris Harris, senior

"Northwest, like you've never seen it before" was published by Josten's American Yearbook Company, Clarksville, Tennessee, in the spring of 1981. The 1981 Vanguard is a 9 X 12 book with 176 pages and 1000 copies.

Copy is set in ten point News Gothic, captions in eight point News Gothic bold italic. All copy runs unjustified right. Spot colors include process yellow (pp. 86-87), and percentages of red and black (28-29 and 94-95), blue and black (6-7), red and yellow (82-83 and 90-91), and navy blue (84-85, 88-89, 92-93, and 96-97). Endsheets are white 534 and the cover is blue 347 on a mission grain.

The book jacket is printed on 100 lb. gloss paper, with a 100 percent PMS blue background. The photograph is a PMS blue 289 duatone. Special thanks to four very special "grown-ups"—Sonny Ruberto for his supplies, wit, and phone answering machine; Dick Maurer for his ideas, time, and frustration; Lyle Mannweiler for his patience, instructions, and pizzas; and Gwen Mannweiler, for EVERYTHING.
